The Superintendent of the Census, Robert P. Porter, estimates the population of the country at 64,500,000, according to the Washington Post. These figures satisfy expectations and gratify the national pride. About 65,000,000 was the general calculation.

The principal of a Canton, O., public school has been deposed merely because he happened to be a Republican, and a Democrat has been put in his place. Pretty soon the churches will be choosing their pastors with reference to the political faith that is in them.

For nearly a week Chicago has been the center of an immense oven, which extended from the Missouri river to the Ohio and from British Columbia to Pensacola. Moisture has filled the air to an abnormal degree and made life almost unbearable. Up to 8:30 o'clock Friday night 68 unconscious or dead people had been picked up in the streets of Chicago by the police and over 300 dead bodies were dragged away by the health officers.

One Devil Cast Out

A man calling himself Elder W. G. Raymond has been in Jamestown a few weeks conducting meetings. He claims to have power to heal all manner of diseases and to cast out devils, after the manner of Christ and the apostles. He was holding a meeting one night at the home of Miss Ida Stetson, a woman who is dying with consumption. The meeting culminated in a fight instead of the devil being cast out. He so wrought up the feelings of the sick woman that she screamed and fainted. The bystanders interfered and forced the apostle to leave the house. He saved himself from personal violence. The citizens are very indignant at the elder's work, Mrs. Slawson having been so wrought up that her death is apparently very near. Many persons, however, seem to believe implicitly in Mr. Raymond's work.

On the Great Lakes.

The Steamer 'Nyack' has been withdrawn from the Lake Superior Transit Co., and will hereafter be run by The United Steamboat Company, the Lake Line of the Erie Railway. The 'Nyack' is to easily become the best passenger boat on the great lakes and her regular trips to Duluth and West Superior are so arranged as to afford the finest possible tour for pleasure seekers. Stops are made at the principal intermediate cities and connections with the Great Northern, and Northern Pacific, and St. Paul & Duluth Railroads afford unequaled advantages for passengers to St. Paul, Minneapolis, Helena, Butte and the Pacific Coast. Detailed information may be obtained from W. Buthland, manager or Geo. E. Allen, Gen. Nor. Pass. Agt., Buffalo N. Y.

SLEEPING IN THE WOODS

Beautiful Pen Picture of a Night by "Adirondack" Murray.

Imagine your bed chamber of odorous bark, and your bed of pungent boughs. Your cedars make under murmuring trees and within a few yards of the lazily moving water, whose odorous caress rather than chafe the shore. Stretched your full length on such a couch, spread in such a place, the process of falling asleep becomes an experience. You lie and watch yourself to observe the gradual departure of your senses. Little by little you feel yourself passing away.

Slowly and easily as an ebbing tide you begin to pass into the dim and insensible realm beyond the line of feeling. At last a moment comes in which you know you are passing over the very verge of consciousness. You are aware you are about to fall asleep. Your cheek but partially interprets the cool pressure of the light wind; your ears drowsily surrender the lightering murmur of beach and pine; your eyes droop their lids little by little; your nose slightly senses the odor of the piny air, as you mechanically draw it in; the chest falls as it passes as mechanically out, and then—you are asleep.

The hours pass, and still you sleep on. The body, in obedience to some occult law of force within the insensible frame, still keeps up its respirations; but you are somewhere sleeping. At last the pine above you, in the deep hush which precedes the coming of dawn, stills its monotone, and silence weaves its airy web amid the motionless stems. The water falls asleep. The loon's head is under its spotted wing, and the owl becomes mute. The deer has left the shore, and lies curved in its mossy bed. The rats no longer draw their tiny wake across the creek, and the frogs have ceased their croaking. All is quiet. In the profound quiet, and unconscious of it all, the sleeper sleeps. What sleep such sleeping is! and what a ministry is being ministered unto mind and body through the cool, pure air, pungent with gummy odors and strong with the smell of the sod and the root lace mold of the underlying earth!—Murray's "Lake Champlain and Its Shores."

Treasure in Cabs.

It is not long since a Paris bank clerk left papers representing some 200,000 francs in a cab, and was lucky enough to find them several hours after lying untouched on the seat. A provincial banker who took a cab on the boulevards one afternoon drove to the Northern station, and was equally absentminded, but was not so fortunate. After dismissing the cab at the station and taking a ticket he remembered that he had left on the seat a portfolio containing bank notes and papers to the value of 80,000 francs.

He rushed to the station entrance, only to find the cab gone, and thence to the stand, from which he had taken it. The particular vehicle he longed to set eyes upon had not yet returned. The distracted banker confided his troubles to the policeman on duty at the stand, and was advised to await there the return of the cab. At the end of an hour two cabs drove up to the stand, and the banker recognized his driver. The latter told the policeman that after leaving the railway station he had driven two ladies to the Palais de l'Industrie. As they quitted the cab they remarked to the Jehu that there was a portfolio on the seat. There was—but it was empty.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Raising Goose Eggs.

Very few men there are at present engaged in a salaried position who do not indulge in one or two side issues for the purpose of swelling their incomes. Billy King, the city passenger agent of the Burlington road, for instance, has engaged in an outside venture which will doubtless bring him in good money. He had read a good deal about ostrich farms in California and of the vast profits accruing therefrom, and he decided to go into a similar business on a small scale. Accordingly he has purchased a flock of geese and a small plot of ground on which to keep them. He has also engaged a man to attend to the flock, and he is putting goose eggs on the market. People may think that there is no money in goose eggs, but from every one to whom Mr. King has told about his goose eggs there has come a hearty response. Goose eggs appear to be in greater demand than geese, and it looks very much as though Mr. King would be obliged to enlarge the little goose farm he has. People laugh at such an industry, but there is money in it.—Chicago Herald.

Consistency.

—"I consider it a burning shame," remarked a lady, "that the overworked clerks of this city are not allowed a half holiday on Saturday."

"I see that Smith & Smith close at noon," said another lady.

"I know they do. I went down there last Saturday afternoon and found the place closed. I was too provoked for anything."—Texas Siftings.

Look Out for Color.

Experiments with English cavalry horses show that gray or dun colored animals are the most easily frightened. The blacks are the most obstinate, the chestnuts the most enduring, and the bays have the most intelligence and do the most reasoning. These facts probably hold good the world over and are a guide to purchasers.—Detroit Free Press.

NOT UNDER THE ENEMY'S FIRE.

When the Rifles of His Own Soldiers Covered Him It Was Different.

"Was I ever afraid in battle?" said an English army officer. "Many times. But there are different kinds of fright. I have served in India, in Egypt and in Western Africa, but the worst funk' I ever had was when there was no enemy within thousands of miles of me.

"I was a captain at the time and was stationed at Fort Royal, Jamaica. We had just got a lot of recruits on our hands, the rawest, greenest recruits you ever saw. I was drilling them in rifle practice at long range, and had great trouble to make them obey orders with precision. In fact, one could never be sure whether they would fire when you wanted them to present, or present when you wanted them to fire.

"I had been sending them through a practice one afternoon, and they were so terribly stupid that I got into a vile temper. The day was fearfully warm, and the sun beat down so fiercely that my horse, a wicked brute, got into almost an ungovernable temper. I sat on my horse at the right of the squad, and was giving them volley practice at long range. When my patience was entirely gone, the men seemed to gain a little sense, and began to fire with rapidity and accuracy. Things were running as smoothly as clockwork, and I was soon soothed into cheerfulness despite the heat. Not so my horse. He was never more vicious.

"We were getting along so well by this time that it was 'Ready! Present! Fire!' and the volley would ring out like a single report.

"Once I cried out 'Ready!' and the work was as pretty as that of veterans.

"'Present!' and every rifle went up to shoulders in perfect form. At the very instant I was about to say 'Fire!' my fretting horse bolted, cutting directly across the range. I was not twenty feet from the squad. My eye caught the glittering rifles leveled right at me, and instinctively I closed my eyes and ducked my head. If you know what British soldiers are you can imagine my feelings, my terrible fear, for, as I said before, I was never before in such a funk.' I knew that if I opened my mouth those recruits would riddle my body with rifle balls, for they were expecting the word 'Fire!' and probably would have taken any sound for that. My desire to cry out, 'As you were!' to get the rifles off my body, was so great that I had to clinch my teeth to keep from crying out. Of course, the whole thing took only a few seconds, but it was many minutes longer than that to me.

"When my plunging horse had carried me from before the motionless rifles, I managed to wheel him. As he came around I cried 'Fire!' and every one of those stolid men obeyed the command with absolute precision. That assured me all the more that had I opened my mouth while crossing their range I should have been a dead man, for they were not drilled sufficiently to distinguish a different order at the last instant, and yet followed one's words with a blind fidelity.

"I have often thought," added the officer, with a strange smile on his lips, "that those recruits fancied I had cut across them to test their drill, for they showed no surprise, not the faintest sign of emotion when I suddenly wheeled and cried 'Fire!' But you may well believe that this was not the case. And I pledge you that never afterward in rifle practice did I get caught in so dangerous and helpless a situation."—New York Tribune.

She Was Afraid of Banks.

An Albany boarding house keeper thought bank officials were slippery and safe deposit vaults unsafe, so she put all her savings, $700, in the knotted corner of a handkerchief she usually carried about with her. A few days later she left her house for an hour without taking her precious handkerchief, which, it is almost needless to say, has not been seen since. However, she finds consolation in thinking that no bank officer got away with it.—Boston Transcript.

In the event of a European outbreak Great Britain would be able to send to sea at a moment's notice 44 modern battle ships and belted cruisers, to cope, in case of necessity, with France's 23, Russia's 15, Germany's 12 or Italy's 10; so that no possible combination of any two of the great powers would place England at a disadvantage.

Excommunicated Ground.

When Moliere died in Paris in 1673 the archbishop obstinately refused permission to have him buried in consecrated ground, and he remained alike obdurate to threats and entreaties. When Louis XIV saw that arguments were without avail, he suddenly asked the prelate: "To what depths does the consecrated ground extend?"

"All unconscious of the drift of this question, the archbishop sullenly replied: "Eight feet, your majesty!"

"Very good," said the king; "the sexton shall dig a grave in the churchyard twenty-five feet deep, then Moliere will be four feet below the consecrated soil." This was done.—Gernia.

Meeting at Whitesville.

The Farmer's League meeting held at Jones' hall, Whitesville July 1, was a grand success. The hall, a large fine one, was well filled, while we listened to an able talk of over an hour from A. W. Litchard of Rushford, who seems to be the right man in the right place. When the farmers were called to give in their names they responded with a rush. Independence means business—their broad shouldered president, John M., when he puts his shoulder to the wheel, intends to keep it rolling. They number now nearly sixty. And friend Jones of the brick, is always ready with his pleasant smile and good words to greet everybody and help the good work along. Three cheers for Independence.

Andover will be full of music on the Fourth. In addition to that furnished by home talent, the Cuba and Whitesville comet bands have been engaged. These are both first class organizations, and are well known in the county. The Cuba band will arrive Thursday evening.

A young man from the wilds of Wellsville was in town the other day. His girl was with him. They were out for a good time, and the young man was bound to have it if it cost every cent he had. They commenced on peanuts, branched off onto soda water and lemonade, and then thought they would try candy. The girl wanted chocolate creams and bon-bons, but the young man thought that was going in a little too heavy, and he called for that "stretchy kind of candy that you can chew up all day without havin' it melt away." He was told that such candy had long ago gone out of style, and wasn't the kind to feed girls on anyway. The Wellsville youth started for home, declaring that he would never come to Andover again, not even to the Fourth of July.

A Valuable Horse Dead.

Tom Knox, jr., a stallion owned by Wm. Hunt of this place died suddenly Saturday morning, of a disease of the stomach and bowels. This horse was well known throughout this section as one of most excellent blood, and his death will be a loss to many breeders as well as to his owner. Tom Knox was 9 years old, and it would have taken several thousand dollars to buy him Mr. Hunt was offered $4,000 for him four years ago but refused to take it. and the horse has lately been considered far more valuable than he was at that time. It is to be regretted that the animal's life could not be saved.

He carried the boy on his back most of the way, and when night settled down built a fire and remained by it till morning, then struck out for civilization, coming out of the woods beyond Colegrove, thirty miles from home, where they took the cars and returned in safety to their home. He forgot to state whether they caught any fish.

SOME GUMPTION.

Attica's Sleeping Beauty.

A curious change has taken place in the condition of Mrs. Emma Althouse, the sleeping beauty of Attica. Her trance periods gradually decreased in duration until the normal was reached, and since then she has been going in the opposite direction until now she is chronically wakeful for unnatural periods and slumbers fewer hours and much more soundly than before. The News has fully chronicled the phenomenal features of her trances, which began three years ago, and continued at intervals until two weeks ago. These trances lasted from 3 to 37 days, during which time she was without nourishment, and could not be awakened except at the time when she predicted each particular sleep would end. Physicians and savants have been unable to account for her peculiar condition or remedy it.

She was first prostrated with a bowel trouble, which baffled the skill of the doctors, and until last week was rigid in bed. Her emaciation steadily progressed, until she resembled a skeleton on which parchment had been stretched more than anything else. Her left side appeared to be paralyzed, and her right arm could hardly be moved, while the power of articulation was nearly lost. The change occurred about two weeks ago, when she was, as other people, dividing her time between sleep and wakefulness. Her three sisters, who have taken turns watching at her bedside were greatly pleased, and Mrs. Althouse brightened up. She was able to absorb more liquid nourishment than usual, and her condition was improved. Her periods of wakefulness began gradually to increase and now she sleeps only four out of 40 hours. Judging from her previous symptoms this may go on until she stays awake all the time. Her physical recovery has so far progressed that she can sit up and converse in low feeble tones. She is also beginning to recover the use of her limbs.

Last week the third anniversary of the attempted poisoning of Mrs. Althouse by strangers was marked by the reappearance of the spots produced all over her by the poison.

CORWIN HILL NEWS.

John Cochrane is building an addition to his barn. The carpenter work is being done by Lewis Bullard.

The school closed on Friday last without the customary exercises, Miss Ingraham, the teacher, having permission from the State Superintendent to close, with the consent of the trustees, before the term was finished.

Several people from this place attended the commencement exercises of Alfred University.

Miss Lida Pingrey accompanied Miss Ingraham to her home in Hornellsville, on Saturday of last week, and stayed over Sunday with her.

One of the front wheels of John Cochrane's carriage came off last Sunday while he and his family were on their way to church. The occupants were thrown out but luckily no one was injured, and nearly all of them arrived at church in time to hear the sermon.

Those Beautiful Eyes.

The maire of a town on the frontier had, in accordance with the recent regulations, to make out a passport for a rich and highly respectable lady of his acquaintance, who, in spite of a slight disfigurement, was very vain of her personal appearance. His native politeness prompted him to gloss over the defect, and, after a moment's reflection, he wrote among the items of personal description: "Eyes dark, beautiful, tender, expressive; but one of them missing."—Figaro.

Kittens in Assorted Lots.

A singular coincidence has come to our notice. Two cats in this village have recently given birth to three kittens each, and in both cases one of the kittens had a fully developed tail, another had a stub tail only, and the remaining one had no tail at all.—Cor. Taunton (Mass.) News.

No Room for Doubt.

"I am afraid you got cheated when you bought this place. You'll never get me to believe your front yard contains an acre."

"Yes it does; I measured it."

"What with?"

"My lawn mower."—Detroit Free Press.
