THE NEGRO GIANT.

In the early part of the present century, some authorities say 1808, George Alexander Gratton, the famous spotted negro, was born on the island of St. Vincent, both of the parents being coal black natives of Africa. Even among the half civilized inhabitants of St. Vincent, Gratton was such a curiosity that they readily paid $1 each for the privilege of seeing what was then termed "the eighth wonder of the world."

The superstitious prejudices of the mongrel negro population placed the freak in such danger of being sacrificed that it was deemed advisable to ship him to England. The child was about 15 months old when he landed with his parents in Bristol. In color his skin was everywhere parti-colored, transparent white and brownish black. On the crown of his head there were several perfect white triangles, with black ones of equally perfect contour within them, which were formed by the odd alterations in the color of the hair or wool.

On his back, almost directly between the shoulders, there was an almost perfect circle with a square of black upon the inside, which in turn had a white triangle in its center. On one leg there was a circle similar to that on the back, all the other spots, except the numerous triangles on the head, neck and face, having no uniformity whatever, being great blotches of white on a black surface with no seeming regard for place or situation.

When nearly 5 years old this remarkable specimen of the genus homo died of a swelling of the jaw, which, curious to say, eliminated nearly every spot from the head, neck and face.—St. Louis Republic.

A Dog's Cruel Treatment at Hotels.

A few winters ago I stopped at a certain hotel in Virginia. I had a pointer and young setter with me. The proprietor told me that dogs were not allowed in the house, but gave the assurance that they would be properly cared for elsewhere. Of course this was satisfactory. I promised the servant who led them off a fee if he took extra care of them. Returning from the theatre late that night I asked to be shown the place my dogs were in. A demur was raised, but I insisted, and I found them chained in an open court yard, with no protection from the bitter weather, and they were actually lying on the frozen snow shivering as if they would unjoint their bones. I was mad and used some plain language, and insisted on having that hotel kicked and there.—Cor. Week's Sport.
