The Excise Question.

The Wellsville Reporter's Belmont correspondent says: What is the status of the excise question in this county? The town meetings were postponed until next fall by the board of supervisors and the licenses all expire on May 1. Good lawyers say they can find no law that will authorize the county treasurer to issue licenses for the intervening time, altho it is suggested that under the general town law special town meetings can be held on petition made by a stated number of voters to the town clerk.

A KANGAROO HUNT,

DESCRIBED BY DR. P. B. HARDY.

Our Former Townsman, in a Letter to His Parents.

Australia, Nov. 1, 1902.

MY DEAR PARENTS:—

I will tell you about the Kangaroo hunt. We went north by train about 100 miles to the "up country," to a place called Tallerook, a small settlement at the foot of a very rocky precipitous low mountain range called the Tallerook ranges. The ranges are densely covered with scrub and on top is a tableland heavily timbered in places. On the tableland are the kangaroo and walloby.

From the village looking to the right up the valley about six miles is a large spur of rock which juts out from the range and forms a very good land mark. We left early in the morning intending to cross it and work around to the spur at the right, leave the range at that point, recross the valley to the road and thence homeward.

I had secured the services of a young man, who was used to kangaroo hunting and who was supposed to be able to go about the mountains with his eyes shut. Well, we reached the top, shot parrots, rabbits and cockatoos on the way. Had a lunch about noon, crossed the level, entered the heavy scrub and began to climb to reach the supposed spur. The traveling was the most tedious and difficult I have ever experienced.

After reaching the objective point we found it was not the spur of rock in question, and in decending on the other side the monotony was broken by the appearance of a walloby a few hundred yards ahead, at which we shot and of course missed. Up to this time I had thought but little about our bearings, trusting entirely to our guide. At this point, thinking we had traveled a long way, I asked about how much furtner we must go before coming out where we could see the Tallerook valley? "Oh, not far," he replied, "when we get on top of this hill, we shall see familiar country."

Well, we reached the top, and as he said what we beheld was familiar, being similar to what we had just gone over, range after range of wattle and bracken scrub and eucalyptus timber. We caught a few breaths and the guide after careful studying the surroundings became a number of shades whiter and said he was lost, and asked if I had any idea where we were.

We now had but an hour's daylight left and as it was impossible to travel after dark it was clearly evident that any efforts to get out of the bush must be made at once, otherwise we must camp. We remembered crossing a small stream late in the afternoon and as we were suffering from thirst we decided to go back to it if possible and follow it out to wherever it went. I had took the lead now for the guide had lost his nerve as well as his head, and declined any more responsibility.

We just reached the stream at dark and saw at once that there was nothing to do but camp under a gum tree for the night. We were very glad to get to the water, for as we had eaten but a lunch since an early breakfast, we required something to keep our ribs from coming together.

If you wish a pleasant experience go out into the woods, find a comfortable spot under a tree, select a soft stick of wood for a pillow and pass the night there. It's exhilarating. It is not lonesome in this country, for the laughing Jackasses, magpies, parrots, ants, tarantulas and snakes keep one company and serve to pass away the time. We had a good fire and managed to keep warm.

At four a. m. we were off again and after a few miles tramp again down the creek came upon the camp of some illuvial gold miners who directed us the way out. We reached Tallerook a little before nine a. m. and found that my wife had kept things lively most of the night and at daylight had sent a searching party into the mountain for us, so on our arrival a rescue party had to be sent out for the searchers. Thus ended my first kangaroo hunt, lost and spent a night in the Australian bush, and walked 30 miles and saw but one walloby.

We are now making arrangements to go up into the Gippsland country for kangaroo and native bears, but shall try to avoid any more star light experiences.
