Hetty Green and Choate.

Hetty Green used to take particular delight in giving a touch of ridicule to all references she made to Joseph H. Choate, who so frequently opposed her interests in litigations. Once she recounted:

"Why, I've known him a long, long time, so long I can remember he used to come around and whisper love tales to me. What do you think of that? And I used to call him 'Cupid' then, with his cute curls. But he's Cherub now. He's turned reformer and is sprouting wings."—New York World.

Poor Fare.

A bold, unsubdued citizen went to a new boarding house, and as he had always met his obligations promptly he had become notably outspoken.

On his second day the hostess asked: "Why don't you say a blessing, Mr. Golden?"

He looked over the table and said gloomily, "I'd like to know what for?"

To the Enrolled Republicans

As a sincere Republican, I take this means of addressing you on the subject of the Republican nomination for United States senator.

We have a common purpose in making the Republican party an effective instrument for good government, and by that instrument restoring our government to respect abroad and self respect at home.

Mr. Robert Bacon has filed his petition as a candidate for the Republican nomination for United States senator. As assistant secretary of state under Mr. Elihu Root—then secretary of state and then ambassador to France—Mr. Bacon has a world vision and experience that would be of inestimable value to this country, should he be permitted to represent our state in the senate.

There are two questions for each enrolled Republican to ask himself: Which of the two candidates for this nomination is best qualified for the position, and the nomination of which would best aid the national ticket? There is no other question involved, and the responsibility rests on the shoulders of the enrolled Republicans. No man can dodge that responsibility by remaining away from the polls or by perfunctorily and without the use of his own intelligence following the advice of another.

There is no question of faction, no question of leadership, no question of personal ambition that can consistently be interjected into the problem.

Mr. Bacon believes in the kind of national preparedness which unites all the utilities of the nation—military, social, industrial—and that the protection of a tariff is an essential part of such preparedness. He believes in the spirit of service which shall bind each individual to the nation as an entirety. His public life has been dedicated to creating a sentiment throughout the country which will crystallize the thought of the nation into a common aspiration, making it actually what it only nominally is—a real national spirit.

Mr. Bacon believes that a combination of events has placed this country in a responsible position in the society of nations. He believes that rights and duties are reciprocal. He believes it is the duty of this country to side with the weak when right and not to fear the strong when wrong.

My impression of Mr. Bacon has been gained first hand, and the inspiration for what assistance I may render him in his primary campaign is due to my own belief from contact and observation in him, in his high purpose, his breadth of views, his unselfishness and his conscientious Americanism.

If the Republican party is to bear its part in the solving of our internal and external questions by placing in positions of high responsibility men who shall speak and act nationally we must call to its standards its best talent.

It is with no thought of disparaging any candidacy, with no thought to interfere other than that element of discussion which is broad, wholesome, normal and humane, that I address myself directly to the enrolled Republican voters.

The Republican party has been most successful when its ideals were high. It has contributed most to the welfare of the nation when it has squared its conduct to moral and political problems which involved the welfare of the nation as a whole.

With no personal pride of opinion, with no desire to set my judgment above that of another, I commend to your favorable consideration the candidacy of Mr. Bacon.

I have given my personal allegiance to Mr. Bacon, believing in the ideals he follows and because I am convinced that if he is nominated and elected his career would be a further credit to our party, of advantage to the nation at home and give increased strength to our councils in international matters.

The world conflict is drawing to a close we all hope. Its flames have reflected America to itself. We cannot claim to be a moral nation unless we are moral as individuals. We cannot claim to lead unless we are qualified to lead. We are not qualified to lead unless we are willing to serve.

The ardor for sacrifice, the willingness by service to fill a place of usefulness wherever it may be found, the development of soul and material welfare create a common unity of purpose in which alone can be spelled Americanism.

A public service without sentiment, without vision, without a sole purpose, reflecting American life, is as idle in result as a windstorm in a desert to create vegetation.

Defense against invasion, preparedness for every emergency, efficiency in resources, human and material, readiness for service, are the tenets of Mr. Bacon's political faith and should appeal to every intelligent mind.

The responsibility is with you. Sept. 19, primary day, is the opportunity. It is for you to nominate a man qualified, ready, experienced; a Republican beyond faction; an American who stands the acid test.

Job E. Hedges.

TOMBS OF THE PHARAOHS

Ingenious Devices Used to Guard Against Grave Robbers.

The ingenuity displayed by the ancient Egyptians to prevent robbers from breaking into the Pharaonic graves merits admiration from present day engineers, says a work on the sarcophagus of Khafra, the builder of the second Gizeh pyramid, who reigned in Egypt some 5,000 years ago.

The lid of the red granite sarcophagus was dovetailed with minute precision into the receptacle. To prevent the cover from being drawn back the Egyptian builders bored two holes in the underside of the lid near the edge, not showing above. These corresponded exactly with two similar holes, less deep than the other two, sunk in the front end of the receptacle. Two copper bolts were then placed in the lid holes, and at the moment the sarcophagus was fully closed the upper and lower holes met and the bolts dropped in position from the upper holes partly into the lower, thus making it impossible to move the lid.

It must have struck the Egyptian engineers that grave robbers might get at the body by turning the sarcophagus upside down, in which case the bolts would glide back into their original position and permit the lid being drawn out. To prevent this they filled the lower holes with wax and made the bolts hot. Upon the lids being placed in position the bolts melted their way into the wax and upon cooling became so firmly fixed that nothing short of complete destruction could open the royal tomb.

It must have been a herculean labor to hew the whole edge away, but that is what grave desecrators did, and the wax can still be seen in the bore holes.

Perfectly Simple.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "this article says that the old fashioned stump speaker has almost disappeared."

"Yes?"

"Well, it's easily explained. The government has imposed so many restrictions on cutting down trees that the supply of stumps has probably given out."—Washington Star.

"For three years, I was troubled with Constipation. At times, the attack would be very severe, accompanied by Dizziness and Violent Headaches. I took medicine and laxatives the whole time, but as soon as I discontinued treatment, my bowels would refuse to move. Last October, I went to Montreal and there heard of 'Fruit-a-tives'. I used one box and the results were so pronounced that I bought two more boxes. I continued using 'Fruit-a-tives' and noticed a decided improvement. I gradually reduced the dose from three a day to one tablet every three or four days until the twenty-four boxes were finished when my physical condition was perfect".

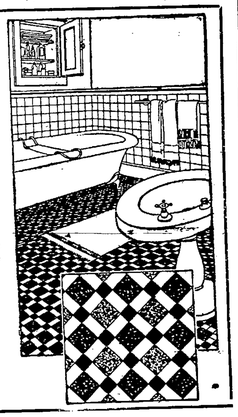
Expert Linoleum-Laying Service



When you buy Linoleum here you also buy the services of a linoleum laying expert, the services of whom we are indeed fortunate in possessing. Next to the quality of Linoleum bought, the care with which it is laid is the most important factor in the wear that you will receive from it. Linoleum that warps up here and there, soon cracks and goes to pieces. Good Linoleum properly laid will last indefinitely.
