More Dresses for Less Money.

Dressmaking at home is one of the "social nuisances," but a stylish wardrobe at half the cost is one of its compensations. Besides, you have an opportunity of working out your own ideas, which the modiste either can't or won't do. The great fatigue has deterred many ladies from making their own dresses, but with Hall's Bazar Form this objection is entirely removed. It is adjustable, and can be made to fit NEARLY EVERY size. When covered with a waist and arranged to fit your own proportions, the Form becomes an exact model of yourself.

Price of Complete Form, $6.50; Price of Skirt Form, $3.50; Price of Skirt Form, Wood Standard, $3.00. Sent to any address on receipt of price.

All the fashion publishers—Butterick, McCall, Taylor, Demarest, Harper's Bazar, and others—unite in saying that Hall's Bazar Form is the only perfect dress-form made. When not in use can be folded and put away like an umbrella.

Write for our illustrated brochure, "More Dresses for Less Money," giving full particulars.

TRUTH AT A HIGH PREMIUM.

Eddie Almost Burned Down His Father's House, but He Didn't Tell a Lie.

Little Eddie is a Brooklyn toddler. His great ambition is to be a man and wear a mustache. But he likes to play with matches. Of course his mother has often forbidden him to touch them, but he has often disobeyed her.

Until the other day, however, he had done no mischief. Then he learned a lesson that will probably linger in his memory as long as he lives. His mother had left the house to do some shopping and Eddie and his brother Cliffie were alone.

Scarcely had the mother closed the door behind her then Eddie proposed to start a bonfire in the back yard. This proposition was warmly seconded by Cliffie, and they soon gathered a heap of fuel.

As a high wind was blowing they thoughtfully placed these inflammable materials in a corner formed by a high board fence, a two story frame extension of the house. In a few minutes the pile was lighted and the children were dancing around the blaze in high glee.

The fun was short lived. Soon the woodword of the extension was ignited. At first it burned slowly, but none the less surely. The boys became frightened and ran for water; but while they were absent the flames entered a crack in the building, and when they returned they found a fire of large dimensions.

Realizing that he could do nothing Eddie ran upstairs to an upper room, where his father was writing. He coolly remarked, "Papa, I believe the house is on fire!" Papa quickly found that the child's diagnosis of the case was correct.

It required but little time to send out an alarm, and the firemen were soon at work on the burning structure with axes, hose and water. The fire was extinguished, but the building and most of its contents were wrecked.

One room in the extension had been made a store house for toys and other playthings, but these papa rescued from the flames at the risk of his life. But it was a serious battle in clouds of blinding, suffocating smoke.

After it was all over there was an investigation. Little Eddie was the first witness.

"How did the house get on fire, Eddie?" asked papa.

"Why, papa," he said as his big, dark eyes filled with tears, "I is sorry, but I did it with my bonfire."

For a moment papa wished he owned a horsewhip, but love and admiration for his truthful little man prevailed, and with a half stifled sob of joy he caught Eddie in his arms and kissed him.

"Yes," said papa afterward in telling the story; "I suppose you will say I ought to have whipped the little rascal, but the fact is, sir, I didn't have the heart. No amount of money could have hired me to have done so. Punish them? Oh, yes; I sent Eddie and Cliffie to bed without their suppers, but after that my heart relented and I sent them each a slice of bread. No, I don't believe in encouraging such mischievousness, but I do believe in placing a high premium on truth."—New York Herald.

Get Thee Gone, Ingrowing Nail.

Sufferers from ingrowing toenails have often been advised to slit the center of the nail. A much better way is to thin the surface of the top of the nail with sand paper, say No. 2, or finer, as best suits the case. Keep the nail short in the center, allow the corners to grow until they are a little beyond the flesh and then place a little double of cotton cloth between the sore place and the edge of the nail. All this being done the relief is immediate and the cure certain.—New York Journal.

Relation of Eye Strain to Headaches.

A New York physician, who has for several years been studying the relation of eye strain to headache, etc., in children, has published the results of his labors. He finds that cases of short sight, far sight and irregular sight often go unrecognized until the continued eye strain results in a chronic headache and lassitude, or even more serious nervous disorders. The most approved modern treatment in certain cases of headache is to order the use of spectacles.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Owing to improved sanitary and other conditions the chances of life have increased 5 per cent during the last ten years.

BRUIN NAILED TO A TREE.

As True as a Great Many Bear Stories and Certainly Original.

Everett Paxson, A. Randolph, Will Morris and Julius Jacobs, brother of City Treasurer Jacobs, returned from Yellowstone park, where they have been fishing, hunting and loafing for five weeks. They are as bronzed as Indians and as truthful in yarns as sailors. They killed carloads of small game, all of which was shipped east. As to large game, many bears were seen, but the gang fought shy of them.

Julius Jacobs, however, had a wonderful adventure with a bear which is worth recording. On horseback he rode some distance from the camp, and got away from his companions. Tethering his horse to a tree in the dense forest he cast his eagle eye around for game, and when several rods from his horse he descried an immense bear glaring him full in the face. Jacobs wasn't loaded for bear. If he had been it would have been a simple and ordinary bear story. The bear wasn't very troublesome, but whenever Jacobs started to retreat bruin would advance a few paces toward him.

If he advanced toward the bear the bear would show his teeth and retreat a few steps. Thus, with considerable maneuvering, about the same relative positions were maintained. Jacobs searched all his pockets for a suitable weapon, and finally found a tenpenny nail. A bright idea seized him, and he carefully drew the bird shot from his gun and loaded it up with the tenpenny nail. The bear was standing with his tail against the trunk of a tree. Jacobs took careful aim, fired and nailed the bear's tail fast to the tree. The bear was now unable to advance toward Jacobs, and he retreated in safety to where his horse was tethered.

Arrived at this point another brilliant idea struck Jacobs. He took his riding whip and returned to the scene of the adventure. He began flaying the bear with the whip in spite of the bear's howls and protests. Finally the hide was so loosened that the bear jumped clear out of his skin and made his way into the woods with yells of distress. Jacobs calmly drew the nail from the tree, slung the skin over his shoulder, mounted his horse and returned to camp.

Unfortunately, while the caravan was crossing the Jefferson river, the bearskin tumbled off and was lost. Jacobs, however, still has the tenpenny nail and can show it.—Anaconda Standard.

Tricks for Dogs.

To "beg" or to "play dead," to "say his prayers," to "smoke," to "read," are all easily learned by dogs. First show the dog what you want by putting him in the position you wish him to take, with the command which you use for the trick. Be sure always to use the same words for any trick. Do not say "Lie down!" one day and "Charge!" the next. If you begin with "charge" keep on with it.

You will do well to teach your dog to follow close behind you or, as it is called, to "heel." It will at times be a convenience to you. It is easy to make the dog associate the command "Heel!" with the act of walking close behind his master, but it requires a good deal of persistence on the trainer's part. It is a dog's nature to run and roam all about, and if he is allowed to "forget" once or twice he seldom remembers thereafter.—Youth's Companion.

The Indian's Ideal.

Above wealth, wives, children and civil renown there is one thing an Indian holds next to his God, and around his mind is enthazoned the halo of him who can fight and die. A soldier—that is the man whose image fills an Indian's eye. The bow and the lance were the emblems of all that was noble in the old days, and a little patch in a blue uniform is the only thing good about the white people which an Indian ever saw. He represents courage, justice and truth, and while the evil agents sent from Washington to dole out bad and insufficient rations to a conquered race may receive the homage, they can never command the respect of the wild tribes.—F. Remington in Harper's Weekly.

In for a Good Time.

Ethel (surprised)—Why, Carrie! What are you having the house decorated for?

Carrie—You see, ma and pa are away, and we intend to make the most of their absence. Tonight we'll have a dance, to-morrow's card party, next night prayer meeting—they'll be home then.—Judge.

A HINT FOR TRAVELERS.

"Lapping" Books No Longer Pays on Southern Railroad Trains.

"We don't lap any more books," said a chipper newsboy at the Central depot last night. "Truth is, we lost so many that way till we just can't afford it. I don't know for certain who first started such doings, but some of the boys say it was Billy McAfee on the Richmond and Danville road. Bound to be Billy; he's always starting something he don't know nothing about. Old Billy is a leader for all that. The way that scamp can persuade the women into buying books is a sin and a shame. Ain't no use in talking, he can just do it, that's all. I heard some of the boys telling about how Billy's lapping of books worked the first day he fell on to the scheme.

"People looked wild when they saw the 'butch' throwing all sorts of books into their laps without asking a cent for 'em. 'Twas all Billy could do to hold in when the women would look up and smile and say 'thankee.' But they changed their tune when he passed through the car to collect 'fares' on 'em. Everybody was so interested reading the books that they wouldn't stop, and they flung out the little twenty-fives and fifties like shot out of a shovel. Some of the women didn't have the change, and they was mighty sorry they'd started to read the books. They'd blush and look like they wanted to borrow the funds.

"Lapping worked splendid them times, but she's changed now. People are in the habit of getting off with the books. We lost anything that way! No, siree. Many is the one that's got off with my books, but I made it up on the next man. 'Twon't do to get left.

"Talking about reading people, I've always been mighty successful at it. I can tell a preacher or a lawyer 'every fire.' Oh, yes, I always have bound books for their sort. I slipped one time, though. It was this way: The company had purchased a lot of cheap books, 'How to Cure Diseases of the Mind and Body,' and as they was hard stock we boys was allowed double commish on 'em. I had one left, and was mighty anxious to dispose of her. She was clean and neat, but she just wouldn't go. One day, coming out of Macon, I espied a little dried up man, with shaggy hair and weak looking eyes. He had the littlest hands I ever seen, and legs and feet according. I set him down for a countryman. I made bold to tackle him.

"'Here's the last one I have in stock,' I said to him. 'Better take it if you need anything of the kind,' I argued; 'this is the only one in print. Country people don't have to send for a doctor when they have this work.' The little man looked up at me sorter tired and said mildly: 'You little rascal! If you don't go away from me I'll throw you out that window.' I turned up my lip at the little old countryman and walked out. When we reached Atlanta the depot was crowded with people, and they kept up such woopin' an' hollerin' when the train stopped I poked my head out to see what was the matter. Would you believe it, they had this little countryman by the hands, and looked like they'd go plum crazy about him. I got sorter uneasy, and I eased up to the conductor and asked him who the countryman was, and he said, 'Look heah, boy, don't you know Governor Alex Stephens?'"—Atlanta Journal.

Professor Pickering thinks that the term canal, applied to the marks on the surface of Mars, is a misnomer, and that there is no proof whatever of any one containing water. Had there been anything like a watery vapor his own powerful instrument would have developed it.
