Growth of the Automobile.

The rapid growth of the automobile industry is illustrated by the fact that there are nearly 150 exhibits at the New York automobile show. About half of these are devoted to the manufacture of automobiles, the remainder dealing with tires, lamps, wheels and other parts and accessories.

There are at present in the United States 14,000 automobiles, and before the close of 1903, if they can be supplied, there will probably be 40,000 instead of 14,000. The belief of manufacturers of the horseless vehicle is that if the factories are able to turn them out ten years from now there will be more automobiles in use than horse drawn vehicles today. Already some of the prominent bicycle and carriage manufacturers are engaged in the manufacture of automobiles.

The tendency to lessen the cost of the vehicle to the purchaser is already emphasized. A vehicle that cost $1,500 a year ago can be bought today for half the money. Within a few years, it is said, the automobile will become as the bicycle is today—cheap enough for almost any one to have one. Today they are the toys of the rich. Before long, the manufacturers say, they will be the poor man's joy.

Four thousand manufacturing establishments in the United States are now required to supply the demand for horse drawn vehicles. More employes than are now engaged in the building of carriages and wagons soon will be required to keep pace with the demands for automobiles.

The fact is fast being established that the cost of transportation through the agency of the automobile is much less than through that of horse drawn vehicles. When it is not in use, the cost of maintenance is practically nothing for an automobile. Consequently thousands who are unable to pay the cost of keeping a horse will be able to possess an automobile big enough to carry the entire family and luncheon baskets large enough for a day's outing in the woods.

There has been in certain quarters much prejudice against the automobile, and not without reason. This was due to the manias for making it the vehicle of racing sport and the recklessness characterizing the running of the machine in speed tests. Happily there is now a tendency to make the automobile more of a vehicle of usefulness and legitimate pleasure and less of a toy for racing sport and "speed madness." In proportion as this tendency is advanced will the automobile grow in popularity and usefulness.

The authorization by the house of representatives of the committee on merchant marine to investigate the shortage and high prices of both anthracite and bituminous coal may accomplish some good and perhaps fix the responsibility for the present conditions where it belongs. However, the thing most needed just now is action, not investigation. It requires no congressional inquiry to demonstrate that there is a fuel scarcity amounting to famine in many centers of population, and the shivering and distressed public, in many instances unable to get coal at any price, are hardly in the mood to wait the findings of a long winded investigation before getting relief. They want coal, and they want it now.

The United States consul at Genoa says, "It is certain that the American firm which first establishes itself in Genoa in the coal trade and handles business even at a very narrow margin of profit will in time make money." This must be welcome news to our struggling coal dealers. Instead of languishing along here on the present starvation profits they can go to Genoa and make money. Their departure will not be deeply regretted.

The senate judiciary committee has finally authorized a favorable report on the bill passed by the house at the last session for the amendment of the bankruptcy law. The senate committee has, however, made so many changes in the original bill that its prospect of passage at this session is rather doubtful.

President Castro having decided to accept the allies' terms of arbitration, one phase of his troubles would seem to be fairly on the road to settlement. If he could now hale the revolutionists to The Hague court, Venezuela might yet be peaceful and happy.

Governor Stone estimates that the coal strike cost the state of Pennsylvania over $1,000,000. This, however, is insignificant in comparison with what it has cost and is still costing the people.

The Dardanelles Treaty Violation.

Not a little irritation in the relations of Great Britain and Russia has been caused by the recent passage of Russian torpedo boats through the Dardanelle strait.

The treaties of Paris and Berlin relating to the Dardanelles provide that no war vessel other than Turkish shall pass through the strait without the consent of the Turkish government. In this case the Turkish government consented to the passage of the unarmed Russian torpedo boat from the Mediterranean to the Black sea. As the vessels were not armed, the sublime porte claims that the terms of the treaties were strictly complied with, while Great Britain claims that it was a violation of treaty stipulations, and British papers stoutly insist that such defiance of Europe will result disastrously to the Ottoman empire.

The Dardanelles provision of the treaty of Berlin was adopted nominally as a defensive measure for Turkey, but really as a restrictive measure against Russia. The purpose was to prevent Russia's arming on the Black sea. But, in spite of all restrictions, Russia has built up a powerful war fleet on the Black sea and is as strong there proportionately as Great Britain or Germany is on the Mediterranean.

In other words, Russia is as strong on one flank of Constantinople as Great Britain is on the other and, with a strong fleet only forty miles away, is more likely to become an ally of Turkey in an emergency than any other European power. It is probably not so much the mere passage of a few Russian torpedo boats through the strait or even the apparent violation of the treaties that disturbs Great Britain as the possibility of a Russo-Turkish outcome, which the Dardanelles incident would seem to foreshadow. At all events, the affair heightens interest in the situation in the Levant, over which always hang clouds more or less inimical to the peace of Europe.

Important Decision Against Corners.

The appellate court of Illinois has lately handed down a decision in relation to speculation which ought to make it extremely difficult for the operators on the Chicago board of trade to conduct a corner in grain or any other commodity. The decision is in the cases growing out of the corner in oats at Chicago in July last, when the price was forced to 64 cents on the day of settlement. Many firms were hard hit, and certain ones who had sold outs around 37 cents refused to permit their margins to be paid out by the depositary bank, alleging that the price which had been established by the managers of the corner was fictitious. Injunctions restraining the board of trade and the bank from acting were obtained, the judge issuing the orders on the ground that corners were illegal.

In sustaining the lower court the appellate court holds that the charter of the board of trade gives the body permission to arbitrate only in case the parties voluntarily accept its offices. Aside from the fact that the charter does not allow the board to pass arbitrarily upon property rights of its members, the court holds that the exercise of such a power would be "contrary to the law of the land."

In view of this decision holding that the Chicago board of trade has no power to force settlements at fictitious prices, which always prevail when corners are being operated, it would appear that speculators would hereafter be wary about creating corners.

No one questions the immorality and injustice of any set of men cornering any product, particularly a public necessity, though the courts have been rather slow in finding and administering a remedy for the evil. Whether such a remedy has been found in the decision of the Illinois appellate court remains to be seen.

As a result of Marconi's developments in wireless telegraphy it is stated that a daily newspaper will be published in midocean on board of one of the North Atlantic liners. Fortunately the transatlantic voyager, seeking rest and surcease from care, will not be obliged to read it.

Lieutenant Peary now comes out frankly with the statement that if anybody will put $150,000 at his disposal he will try again to reach the pole. Here's a chance for Mr. Ziegler, who has been poling as an "angel" for north pole explorers.

In the matter of the fuel supply the people have promises to burn. Unfortunately, however, the caloric value of the coal companies' assurances is not high.

After the Durbar—What?

According to all accounts, the Delhi durbar, in commemoration of the coronation of Edward VII. of England as emperor of India, which has just been brought to a close, was unquestionably the most gorgeous pageant, or, rather, series of pageants, that the modern world has ever witnessed. It suggests that somehow the English rulers of India got possession of Aladdin's magic lamp and needed only to rub it in order to have gold and silver, diamonds and rubies, silks and cloth of gold, elephants and various strange and decorative beasts rain down in the camp at Delhi to grace a British festival. An account of the closing pageant gives this splendid picture:

> An almost incalculable wealth of gold and silver was displayed as the seemingly never ending medley of elephants, camels, troops, musicians and carriages, representing the different Indian states, passed before the vice regal dais. The elephants carried howdahs and trappings of the purest gold and silver. There were carriages of pure silver and sedan chairs of gold.

All this is very fine and gives the impression that India is rich almost beyond comprehension. We have read before now of "the wealth of the Indies," but we have also read more frequently of the famines of India.

Since the Indian government has an Aladdin's lamp which it could rub for this magnificent spectacle, why can't it rub occasionally for a little food for the starving Indian people? Under Lord Curzon's rule in the last two or three years the price of food and commodities in India has risen from 40 to 60 per cent, with no increase in workmen's wages. Intense and widespread distress has resulted. Some part of India, indeed, is chronically in a state of famine.

But the great durbar, which has cost nobody knows how many million pounds sterling, is over. What next? Shall we soon read, as we have read time and again in the past, the piteous appeals for succor from the plague and famine stricken people of India?

Pan-American Arbitration Tribunal.

The Pan-American congress held in the City of Mexico about a year ago seems likely to bear fruit, the United States senate committee on foreign relations having authorized a favorable report on the arbitration treaty framed in accordance with the recommendations of that body. It will be recalled that there were sharp differences of opinion in the congress on the question of arbitration. Some of the South American republics favored compulsory arbitration, and in the end ten of the nations represented signed such a treaty. Others favored acceptance of The Hague tribunal, and others, again, favored compulsory arbitration for the settlement of pecuniary claims, but not for boundary disputes.

The proposed treaty which the senate committee has favorably reported is on the lines of The Hague treaty, but applies only to the republics of the western hemisphere. It provides a tribunal for settling disputes as to boundary lines and claims, the differing nations to use it or not, as they may elect. This is better than the compulsory plan recommended by the ten South American republics and will probably be acceptable to Chile and Ecuador as well as to Mexico and Argentina.

While the United States could not agree to pay treaty that would obligate us to submit a boundary dispute or any other dispute involving national honor to arbitration and therefore could not ask any other American republic to do so, this country may with propriety recommend the creation of a distinctively American tribunal to which the republics of America may appeal for settlement of controversies and adjustment of differences.

If the new treaty is in effect simply an extension of The Hague principle to include republics denied access to that tribunal, much good may come of it. An American tribunal for the consideration of American disputes would be better than arbitration by any European sovereign or commission. Within the last few years boundary and other disputes in South America have been submitted to England, Belgium, and other European nations, and decisions have been rendered in some instances not on information, but on sentimental considerations. An American tribunal, rightly constituted, would at least take an intelligent view of the situation.

Spelling and Pronunciation.

The Modern Language association, which has lately been in session in Baltimore, proposes to simplify the spelling of the English language. There is need enough of it, though it must proceed with discretion and intelligence, so as not to make our orthography more complicated and complex than it now is. The movement should not be confused with the efforts of those who are striving to introduce the phonetic spelling of all words. The activity of these latter orthographical reformers seems to have abated somewhat in recent years, and we hear now comparatively little about phonetic spelling, though unquestionably in the spelling of a good many words it would be preferable to the present form.

The Modern Language association has a rather modest programme and does not propose to revolutionize orthography all at once. The changes suggested, which are specifically set forth in a pamphlet by Professor Calvin Thomas of Columbia university, lately issued, are few, and it is proposed to work them into use gradually. One of the first words whose spelling it is proposed to simplify is thorough, making it thoro. As the public becomes accustomed to the new spelling of this word and those of similar formation still other words will be taken up and their spelling improved and popularized.

There is another reform which might well be taken up in this connection, and that is the careless pronunciation indulged in, or at least tolerated, by educated persons who ought to know better. Indeed, there ought to be a general overhauling of our language, which is about the most complex vehicle of communication in the world, though it should be done gradually and with intelligence.

We should think that the Erie railroad company would rather save 50 percent of the cost of fuel at the Andover Station and burn gas, but they obstinately cling to the old coal stoves, in as much as they have so far this winter been unable to obtain hard coal for their use. The discomfiture of the traveling public seems to have no more appeal to them than does the fact that they are now paying at least twice as much for the very poor heat obtained, than they would pay by the use of gas, thereby having cleanly and convenient fires and pleased patrons.

Here is something worth knowing. When a splinter has been driven keenly into the hand it can be extracted without pain by steam. Nearly fill a bottle with hot water; place the injured part over the mouth and press it slightly. The suction will draw the flesh down and in a minute or two the steam will extricate the splinter and the inflamation together.

In Fultonville not long ago a boy was required by his teacher to write an essay on "The mouth," and this is what he wrote: "The mouth is the front door of the face. It is the aperture to the cold storage of our anatomy. It is the hotbed of toothache and the bunghole of oratory. The mouth is the fountain of patriotism and the tool chest for pie. Without the mouth the politician would be a wanderer on the face of the earth, and go down to a dishonored grave. It is the grocer's friend, the dentist's hope. It is the temptation lunch counter when attached to a pretty girl and a tobacco repository when attached to a man."

Sudden Death of Patrick Hamel.

Patrick Hamel, an aged Andover resident, died at his home on Chestnut street Sunday morning of pneumonia. He was taken ill Friday, and despite medical aid succumbed to the disease.

Mr. Hamel was born in Ireland in 1821, being 81 years old at death. For the past 51 years he has resided in Andover, and has been a hard working man. He had acquired a good farm almost within the incorporation and a home at which he died, and was the father of a large family. He leaves to mourn his loss five children, three boys, William, Joseph and John and two daughters, Mrs. James Cannon and Mrs. T. Barker. Funeral services were conducted at the house yesterday afternoon by Rev. G. M. Janes of Belmont. The Interment was made in the Robinson cemetery by the side of his wife.

Please be Humane.

A bill to amend the law requiring transportation companies to unload and feed live stock passing thru the state after the animals have been in the car 28 hours, is offered in the House of Representatives making the time limit 40 hours, instead of 28 hours. How any person can favor such an inhumane act is beyond comprehension. If this amendment shall be adopted its effect will be to subject millions of innocent and harmless animals to undescribable tortures, and to land them at their destination in a condition in which they will be utterly unfit for food.

Millions of unfortunate animals ought not to be subjected to needless torture in order to give a commercial advantage to transportation companies. When cattle are to be shipped long distances for market purposes they should be slaughtered at the place of embarkation, and forwarded in refrigerator cars.
