The burning of the North German Lloyd steamships across the river from New York, by which over 200 persons lost their lives in a most horrible manner, has cast a deep gloom over the entire nation. It seems almost incredible that such a dire calamity could occur while vessels were moored at their docks. Most of the dead and injured belonged to the crews of the different steamers, still it is believed that many passengers were burned on the Saale. Miss Nellie McDonald of Amsterdam, who has many friends and acquaintances in Greenwood, had engaged passage on the Main, one of the burned steamers. Many who had contemplated visiting the Paris Exposition will hesitate about "going down to the sea in ships" when they recall the horrors of a fire on shipboard.

The Chinese situation is assuming a graver aspect, and have already reached a point where a general war seems inevitable. The killing of the German minister has aroused a feeling in Europe and America that will result in a lesson that the semi-barbarians of the flowery kingdom have not yet learned. The civilized world has also learned that pledges on the part of the Chinese government to protect foreigners are no protection, as the present dynasty is hardly able to uphold itself. Foreign occupation seems to be the only course left, and that should be with a force that will command the respect of the Chinese.

It now seems to be part of the program of the Kansas City Convention to nominate Bryan on the "Ever Glorious Fourth." That place would have at least one advantage, as the Democracy could then claim that the powder that will be burned that day is all in ratification of their work. Noise is regarded as an important factor in political conventions now-days. It is getting to be ludicrous in the extreme.

Bessie Holloway, 12 years old, who lives on a farm with her father and mother, near Fenton, Mo., distinguished herself one night recently. Her sharp ears detected the presence of a robber in the house. Her father was sick and she did not wish to awaken him, so she obtained his revolver, which was on the mantel in his room and descended to the kitchen, where the burglar was at work. Pointing the weapon at him, she demanded that he run. The surprised robber lost no time in "making tracks" for the woods. As the burglar obeyed the stern mandate, "run!" he made a great noise, for he had to tear open a kitchen window sash to find a way out. This awakened her father, and he came downstairs to find his daughter exclaiming: "Oh, but didn't he run, though!"

There were but 5,300,000 people in America when this century opened. France had five times as many people; Germany, and even Austria, had four times America's population; Italy had three times as many, and so had Great Britain. Even Spain had double our number of people, and little Portugal was almost our rival in numbers. We have more people now than any European nation except Russia, which alone leads us.

At the first performance of Sousa's band in the American section of the Paris exposition the enthusiasm of the great audience of Americans that gathered to hear it did not break all bounds until the "Cake Walk" and other ragtime pieces were played. Then the American colony became delirious. The Frenchmen present could not understand it.

Extravagance and Dishonesty

In a recent article in the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post Robert C. Ogden, writing about dishonesty of young men, says: "Great pressing necessity has not often driven men to dishonesty. Extravagance is the most common motive behind the story of every absconding bank official; the feverish desire to live at the rate of $10,000 a year on an income one-fifth that amount makes nearly every defalcation the twin brother of overwhelming debt. One of the noblest men I ever knew was an embezzler. He fell from grace not because he desired an extravagant and luxurious life which his income would not permit, but because he appropriated money in his keeping to aid and support those who were dependent upon him for the necessities of life. Most of the stolen money went to the education of younger relatives and the maintenance of those whom he could not have supported with his comparatively meager salary. It was my privilege to assist this man when the inevitable crash came. He is a man whom I shall always respect, though the motive behind his act in no way nullified the enormity of his sin. But such cases as this are rare exceptions. Let a young man model his career upon a basis of absolute, undeviating honesty and he will not have to seek long for a place of trust. Let him always be in a position to shake hands with himself, for self-respect is as good as the respect of others. The men who to-day control great business enterprises are looking for youths in whom they may place limitless confidence. The world stands ready to wait hand and foot upon those who have proved themselves beyond the seduction of any tempter. Diogenes looking for an honest man has not yet ceased his searching, for though there are many men who are honest in matters of money, there are many more who lack honesty in matters affecting the perfect performance of duty. There is a dishonesty which does not stoop to steal, but which pretends to a faithful service while actually shirking work waiting to be done. That is the commoner transgression of commercial ethics, and one to be avoided by the man who seeks to mold himself for higher things as he would avoid the touch of a leper."

Free Mail by Boat.

Rural free delivery by means of boat is the latest proposed extension of the mail service. The plan was suggested by Postmaster Jones, of Oconomowoc, and is now before the post office department at Washington. In the vicinity of Oconomowoc there is a chain of lakes covering 50 miles of territory along which are the cottages occupied by summer residents. The postmaster's suggestion is that a fast steamer make the trip around these lakes and leave mail at the cottages. This plan seems feasible. The Oconomowoc Waterways association is now dredging a channel from Oconomowoc lake to Fowler lake and a marine railway is to be built to connect Lac La Belle with Lake Fowler. When these improvements are made, and they are planned for the end of August, boats may make a circuit of all the lakes, and rural free delivery, not now possible by wagons or the ordinary means, will be practicable by means of a steamboat. The successful use of the plan in the Oconomowoc region is likely to lead to its extension to other parts of the country where communication is more easy by water than by land.

A happy thought of a young Brooklyn woman whose parents reached the golden anniversary of their wedding a few weeks since was the means of giving a deal of pleasure to the couple, who made no formal celebration of the event. About two weeks before the anniversary the daughter sent cards or messages to friends of her parents residing far away in various sections of the country. Accordingly, on the wedding day letters and telegrams of congratulation came pouring in from all sides, and made the occasion a very happy one to the dear old people.

As yet no census enumerator has been killed by those to whom his inquiries are addressed, but several have acquired large and varied assortments of bruises. When this work is completed those who survive it will be in first-class condition for service in the army.

The following birth notice recently appeared in the columns of a Kansas paper: "Born, to the wife of Jim Jones, a boy. The boy favors his old dad in several ways, viz.: He is bald, has a red nose, takes to a bottle like a bumblebee to a lump of sugar and makes a lot of noise about nothing. Selah!"

Prof. Nelson, of the agricultural department, in discussing the effect of new inventions on the use of horses, says:

Horseless Age Is Not Here.

"From 1887 to 1894, a period marked by great activity in street railway building and also the increased manufacture and use of bicycles, the number of horses increased from 12,466,744 to 16,661,130. This shows that, although the use of the horse decreased in particular directions, yet there must have been a healthy growth in their use in other directions. During this period the selling value of horses gradually declined from $72 to $48 per head. But this decrease was certainly not due to the number of horses thrown on the market as a result of displacement by electricity in propulsion of street cars and the general introduction of the bicycle, because we find that the values of other live stock—mules, milch cows and other cattle—decreased from 30 to 40 per cent. during the same time. During the prevalence of the great commercial depression from 1893 to 1897 the number of horses in the country fell to 14,364,667. At the same time the value per head suffered a further decrease, the same being the case with sheep, swine and cattle other than milch cows. The cattle interest was the first to recover, being followed a year later by the other stock interests. It is likely that there will be a continued demand for the right kind of horses. A great deal has been written about the probable displacement of the horse by the automobile, but it hardly seems probable that it will produce any more serious effect than have the electric street cars and bicycles. Each has its sphere of usefulness, and each will continue to have."

Help the Enumerator.

On June 1 many thousands of men officially known as enumerators began to take the twelfth census of the United States. During the month they will be expected to visit every home. They will ask many questions. Not one of these questions is unnecessary, and, rightly regarded, none is impertinent. Every accurate answer will help to carry out the purpose of the census, which is to determine and record the social condition and industrial standing of the people of this country. Truth-telling cannot possibly have embarrassing results. The information given the enumerator will not be used as a basis of taxation nor communicated to any assessor; and if the enumerator makes any facts public he will be liable to a heavy penalty. The enumerators will undoubtedly try to do their work discreetly and well, for they are reputable citizens, carefully chosen. The government gives them all the aid it can, in the form of instructions so comprehensive that they fill a pamphlet of 64 pages. But the success of the census really depends upon the intelligent cooperation of the people. Receive the enumerator courteously, urges Youth's Companion, answer his questions frankly and in no way hamper or delay him. He is the agent of a great governmental enterprise which should interest and must benefit every citizen of the United States.

Because of an epidemic of scarlet fever in Plainfield, N. J., traced to impure milk, the board of health has made a law that whoever milks a cow in the town or for the town's supply must first wash the hands and brush the clothes. Milk tickets hereafter are to be used only once.

A packing house employe in Kansas City has just invented a device for plucking feathers for chickens. It is so arranged that cross currents of air, set in motion by revolving electrical fans, completely strip a bird of every feather and every particle of down.

The Allegany County Dental Society met at Wellsville Monday. Dr. John Common of Andover was in attendance.

Mrs. J. A. Travis gave a very interesting report of the Ecumenical Conference, last Sunday night, at the union service in the Baptist church.

The action of Congress, in kicking Roberts out, was vindicated by the Utah jury which found him guilty of unlawful cohabitation and fined him $150 or 150 days in jail.

John Hall, while cutting bolts for the Mangle Roller Mill at Independence, Monday, slipped and fell upon a cross-cut saw, one of the teeth of which penetrated a vein in his arm.

Ed. O'Malley of Cuba was in town Tuesday looking after business, and sold a monument to Mrs. E. W. Chamberlain. He has a monopoly of about all the business in this vicinity, as he is well known and always gives his customers the best satisfaction.—Belmont Courier.

Wm. C. Cannon came home Friday from the Harvard Law School. He secured his diploma this year, after wrestling with a very severe examination. He will remain in Andover a few weeks and then go to Buffalo, where he has secured an engagement with a law firm.

It truly seems good to hear the melodious "Hog-de-do" of Robert L. O'Donnell again on our streets, with that particular turn of the arm and hand extended. Rob. came home for a fortnight's visit Monday, and is fast getting on to all the latest in news, gossip, etc., current.

The beautiful new hearse and undertaking paraphernalia of C. L. Whiting, our new furniture dealer and undertaker, was called into use and greatly admired yesterday at the funeral of Mrs. Curtain. It is truly a superb turnout. Besides the hearse and funeral wagon, the cost of which was about $1,500, Mr. Whiting has an elegant set of candlelabra for use in Catholic services

Prohibition county convention at Wellsville, Thursday, July 12th, at half past one o'clock in the afternoon.

We are indebted to Lowell A. Burrows for the photograph for the halftone on our first page this week, and also for the nicely written history of the gentlemen it represents.

Allen Davis has moved from Mrs. Lee's house on Elm street to the house formerly occupied by Peter Rogers, on the Canada side, where he is prepared to repair bicycles, guns, pistols or almost anything else.

Andover has six representatives now employed with the George Watkinson Rubber Co. of Philadelphia, all of which, with the exception of Henry Phillips, are now taking a few days vacation at home. They are: Thomas McTighe, W. H. Phillips, Robert O'Donnell, Miles H. Herrick, Henry Phillips and Miss Helen Hardy. Andover opens wide her gates, and some of them their arms, to these her prodigal children, and says, welcome. The town for the next few days belongs to the George Watkinson Rubber Co. employees.

GEORGE HUNT BADLY INJURED.

Fell Between the Cars on Train 77 —His Injuries May Be Fatal.

George Hunt son of Jason Hunt of this place, met with a horrible accident at Waverly Monday. He boarded train 77, a fast west-bound freight, to go to his home in Hornellsville, and in ascending the ladder lost his footing and fell, catching on the brake-beam. He was dragged in this position for some distance before the train could be stopped.

One of his arms was drawn under the wheels and entirely cut off, and his face and body badly cut and bruised. He was picked up and removed to the hospital at Elmira. His condition is very critical, and recovery questioned. His brother, Jesse Hunt of Andover, immediately started for Elmira, and is now with him. Geo. Hunt was a contracting carpenter, and is well known here, having been brought up in Andover.
