The Jail Breaking Habit.

The tendency of events apparently unrelated to run in sequences is illustrated by the frequent cases of jail breaking that have occurred of late in widely separated sections of the country. The most notable of these were the "jail deliveries" at the Dannemora state prison in New York and at the Folsom prison in California, both of which places of detention were regarded as being about as secure as human ingenuity could make them.

It can hardly be supposed that prison wardens have suddenly grown careless or that convicts have suddenly found confinement more irksome and unendurable than formerly. Probably the truth is that the inhabitants of any large prison are less the prisoners of the walls around them than of the distrust they have for each other and their consequent hesitation to unite against the guards whom they so largely outnumber. The intelligence to plan and the ability to execute an individual escape are lacking in most convicts, but whenever, as in California, a lot of them combine they can usually gain at least temporary freedom by sheer weight and strength. The news of one such achievement spreads by mystern ous telegraphy to many prisons, and the power of suggestion does the rest.

In these days of quick communication and widespread intelligence the business of jail breaking is a most unprofitable one. In nine cases out of ten the escapin convict speedily finds that his energy has been wasted. For him there is nowhere safety, even though he goes to any place except the very ends of the earth, and life in such places is considerably worse than it is in an ordinary prison. However, the escaping prisoner has this consolation—he becomes the central figure of a newspaper sensation, which usually lasts until the publicity which the newspapers give him results in his recapture.

Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is just as good for children as it is for adults. Children thrive on it. It keeps their little stomachs sweet and encourages their growth and development. Mrs. Henry Carter, 705 Central St. Nashville, Tenn., says: "My little boy is now three years old and has been suffering from indigestion ever since he was born. Sex in Industry.

The Massachusetts bureau of labor statistics has lately issued an interesting brochure on "Sex In Industry," in which is shown the industrial progress of women in the Bay State. The report shows that many occupations which formerly belonged exclusively to men are now being invaded by women. Women are working in the following vocations hitherto monopolized by males: Auctioneers, baggagemen, brakemen and conductors, blacksmiths, bootblacks, butchers, carpenters, civil engineers, charcoal, coke and lime burners, copper workers, teamsters, engineers, farmers, hostlers, laborers in coal yards, longshoremen, machinists, masons, oil well employees, pilots, plumbers, tillers, undertakers and veterinary surgeons. This well shows the changed condition of living, for women in many of these employments would have been viewed with the strongest disapproval a few years ago. There are now only few trades or industries closed to women, although, of course, they are less numerous in the harder and rougher branches. Indeed the increase of the number of women working as breadwinners and their invasion of new lines of trade and industry are striking features of the day.

Relative to the effect of the competition of female labor on the standard of wages, it is pointed out that the tendency has undoubtedly been to reduce the wages paid men. This has caused a great deal of apprehension, and it has been found that the competition of female labor would greatly and permanently depress the standard of wages. It is found, however, that it does not work as badly as might be expected. The wages paid women have steadily advanced, and, moreover, it is found that women wage earners as a rule are employed but a few years, when marriage removes them from the ranks of workers. But for the intervention of marriage the chances are that the feminine competitors would greatly depress the standard of wages, though as it is they apparently affect it but slightly.

The American invasion of Europe continues. An American forger has just been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment in an English jail.

Bodily pain loses its terror if you've a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil in the house. Instant relief in cases of burns, cuts, sprains, accidents of any sort.

Short Talks On Advertising

By Charles Austin Bates.

No. 4.

John Wanamaker has said:

"To discontinue an advertisement is like taking down your sign."

That is just the idea. You have a sign above your door to let people know who you are, and where you are, and what you are doing. That's what your ad. does. Space in newspapers merely multiplies your sign. It lets thousands of people know what you have to sell.

The way to think of advertising is to consider first the goods you have, to see if they are really desirable. Then figure on the number of people likely to see your announcement in the paper, the proportion of possible customers among that number, and what you can afford to pay for each dollar's worth of new business. That will give you the size of the ad. you ought to use. Then make your ad. clear, logical, convincing. Don't try to be funny, unless you are naturally so, and even then don't do it too often. What people want in an ad. is exact, definite information. It ought to be given to them in a smooth, more or less argumentative way, and as strongly as possible. "The other fellow" is after the same people.

The amount to be spent for advertising must be determined by the percentage of profits and the percentage of possible customers. It doesn't pay to buy advertising blindly, no matter how good it is. If you are selling $1,000 a week at a gross profit of twenty-five per cent. and can increase the sales to $1,250 at a cost of $50 for advertising, you are a clear $12.50 ahead. Rent and clerk hire, light and heat and interest all go on just the same, whether you sell $1,000 or $1,250. It is advertising that brings in the money to pay all the other expenses. Advertising is business insurance.

Advertising what you haven't got or what you don't do is worse than not advertising at all. You can't be too careful about this. Make your ads. strictly true in letter and in spirit. I believe that the majority of business men do this now, but as it is the most important thing about advertising, it will bear repeating and reiterating.

When merchants and laymen come to consider advertising in its legitimate character of "business news," it will pay better—pay the advertiser better and the advertisee, too.

"It does not pay to buy advertising blindly, no matter how good it is."

"John Wanamaker has said: 'To discontinue an advertisement is like taking down your sign.'"

CHOICE OF CARDINALS

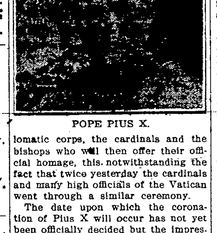
Giuseppe Sarto Elevated to the Pontifical Throne.

WILL BE KNOWN AS PIUS X.

Election of Patriarch of Venice Was Unanimous—Was Looked Upon From the First as a Likely Compromise Candidate—Especialy Acceptable to the Foreign Cardinals.

Rome, Aug. 5.—The conclave, after being in session for four days, has elected Giuseppe Sarto, patriarch of Venice, as pope to succeed Leo XIII and he now reigns at the Vatican and over the Catholic world as Pius X. Last night all Rome was illuminated in his honor.

His election and assumption of his holy office were marked by a striking demonstration and impressive ceremonies at the Vatican, which only ended in the evening. Today the new pope, clad in his full pontifical robes and with all the ritualistic ceremony, will receive the members of the diplomatic corps, the cardinals and the bishops who will then offer their official homage, this notwithstanding the fact that twice yesterday the cardinals and many high officials of the Vatican went through a similar ceremony.



POPE PIUS X.

The date upon which the coronation of Pius X will occur has not yet been officially decided but the impression prevails that it will take place Aug. 9.

Although the election was over at 11 o'clock and was announced to the world 45 minutes later by the appearance of the new pope at the window of St. Peter's, the conclave was not formally dissolved until 5:30 in the afternoon. The cardinals then returned to their various apartments in Rome, with the exception of Cardinals Oreglia and Rampolla, who temporarily retain their official suites in the Vatican, and Cardinal Herrero y Espinosa, who is too ill to be moved for several days.

Visited Sick Cardinal.

It was to the sick cardinal that the new pope paid his first visit after being formally proclaimed pontiff. The cardinals remained in Rome for today's ceremonies and should the coronation be fixed for next Sunday they are not likely to return to their respective homes until after that ceremony. With the exception of the Spanish cardinal, Herrero, all the others are now in fairly good health.

The election of the patriarch of Venice was unanimous. After Monday's ballots it was a foregone conclusion that he was the only candidate satisfactory to all to secure the necessary two-thirds.

One of the cardinals said to the representative of the press that he believed Pius X would follow the broad lines of Leo's policy, although not likely to accentuate it. This voices the general feeling here, which is one of satisfaction.

The new pontiff is a man of simple origin and although not a very prominent candidate he had been frequently mentioned as one of the many cardinals who might be taken up as a compromise. In several respects he resembles his venerable predecessor, notably in his reputation for culture and piety.

Having been associated with no factions this fact alone won him much favor from foreign cardinals who were without an especial candidate. Pius X was humorously described as "a country mouse who could not possibly find his way about Rome." Venetians who know the new pope well, say that he will soon be as much beloved as pontiff as he was as the beloved patriarch of the poor of the Adriatic.

Looks Like Phillips Brooks.

In appearance Pius X is a very handsome man. He has a fine erect figure despite his 68 years, his face greatly resembling that of the late Phillips Brooks. When he pronounced his first benediction at St. Peter's his voice rang out with splendid resonance.

When the great central window of St. Peter's facing the piazza swung slowly open, signifying an election, a loud shout arose and the crowds rushed madly towards the cathedral. At the open window half a dozen Vatican attendants appeared. Suddenly there broke out into the fierce sunlight a gorgeous banner, bearing a cardinals arms. Reinforcements of troops crossed the piazza at the double, then closed their ranks and held back many who strained every nerve to get close to the window.

For a minute or so none knew to which cardinal belonged the arms so significantly displayed. Then the rumor arose that they were Sarto's, but few persons were absolutely sure of their identity.

The tension was soon relieved. Cardinal Macchi in his cardinal robes, carrying a large red book and preceded by a glittering cross, appeared at the window. A wild shout went up. Then came the announcement. Even those out of hearing joined in the shouting that followed.

Vainly the cardinal waved his hand for silence. The long pent-up feelings of those who had watched the stumata for four days now found an outlet and for some minutes they could not be suppressed. Finally it was quiet enough for Cardinal Macchi to proceed and say that the new pontiff had taken the name of Pius the Tenth. Then with a blessing upon the crowd the cardinal disappeared.

Those below instantaneously made a rush to go into St. Peter's and a mad scramble ensued for the Basilica.

Within a pandemonium reigned. Those already standing in a good position to see the gallery window, where Pius X was momentarily expected to appear, were hurled back to the further end of the nave by the irresistible impact of those seeking entrance.

The attendants motioned the crowd to go back to the steps of St. Peter's. A great cry arose. Those who a few moments ago were fighting their way into the cathedral now struggled with redoubled energy to get out. It was the climax of the excitement. The new pope was going to bless the world from the outside of the Basilica which had not been done since the days when the Vatican ruled Rome.

With extraordinary rapidity the Basilica was almost deserted. The attendants hung the banner outside and as all the thousands waiting in the piazza saw it and realized what was intended a great shout of approval arose.

Then came a sudden revulsion. As quickly as the banner had been let down it was drawn up. The plans had been again changed. The last rush that immediately followed for the doors of St. Peter's was almost indescribable. How so many people entered the Basilica in so short a time without injury will always remain a mystery. Inside the pandemonium increased. Amongst the seething mass below, which never ceased waving straw hats, two members of the American pilgrimage, Father Lynch of Niagara university and Father McGowan of New York, held aloft American flags.

In a few moments terrific cheer burst from every throat. There, with the sun streaming in from the window, was the new pope. His rich red papal robes shone resplendent amidst the more sombre colors of those who stood beside him. For a few moments the tall form remained perfectly still. The pontiff was gazing at the crowd beneath. The deafening roar of cheers showed no signs of diminishing. Then Pius X raised his hand in the twinkling of an eye the crowd mad with excitement but a moment before, became dumb and a death-like silence prevailed throughout the Basilica. It was broken only by the clear, strong voice of the new pope, "Ajutorium nostrum in nomine domini," he chanted, like the keys of a magnificent organ struck by a master hand. The response swelled up from the crowd below.

There was another silence and another response. Then came the benediction, such as few will ever forget. All crossed themselves and with marked rapidity the scene ceased to be one of deep devotion. Loud cheers burst from the people as the pope started to go back to the Vatican by the way of the terrace. These acclamations continued long after he had disappeared. Then the thousands streamed out, all happy at the conclave's choice of the pontiff and heartily glad that the suspense had ended.

POPE PIUS X.

Distinguished Himself as a Reformer While Patriarch of Venice.

Rome, Aug. 5.—"Sarto" in Italian means "Tailor," and Pius X, when a young seminarian, being rather elegant in his priestly robes, his companions used to joke him. He began his education at a seminary at Treviso and continued it at Padua.

Pius X was only 23 when he was consecrated a priest at Castelfranco. He gave freely of his very small means often at great self sacrifice. In 1867 he was appointed parish priest at Salzano, which was considered an important promotion.

In 1875 he was elected chancellor of the bishopric of Treviso, then spiritual director of that seminary, judge of the ecclesiastical tribunal and finally vicar general.

Pope Leo, who had highly appreciated his cleverness, piety and modesty, appointed him in November 1884, at the age of 49 years, bishop of Mantua where he remained nine years, until 1893, when he was made a cardinal and appointed patriarch of Venice.

Here he distinguished himself as a reformer, suppressing abuses, restoring the dignity of the clergy and the earnestness of religion.

From his appointment arose heated polemics between the holy see and the Italian government, which maintained that it had the right to choose and appoint the patriarch. The government, however, after having long refused its exequatur, eventually granted it to Sarto, who gained the esteem of the government.

The Italian cabinet has no feeling against Sarto personally. In fact, he might quite well have been their choice if the papacy had not wished him, but it was a political question or which, however, they gave way.

Sarto soon became the idol of the Venetians. When his gondola went through the canals of people rushed on the bridges and along the sides of the canals, kneeling and saluting, the women exclaiming "God bless the patriarch."

This new pope used then to say he did not like to go out of sight of the lions of Saint Mark, which now he will never see again if, as is almost sure, he follows the rule inaugurated by his two predecessors never to leave the Vatican. In the few cases in which he came to Rome, on returning, when asked if he enjoyed the georgeousness of the papal court and the magnificance of the function, Sarto answered:

"When I am there I feel like a fish out of water." He has very modest tastes. He is severe but was just with his clergy. There is nothing he dislikes so much as publicity. Frankness is another of his principal qualities although he is somewhat timid, as has been illustrated on state occasions when his reserve was noticeable.

PIUS X'S FAMILY.

His Elder Brother, an Humble Postman and Merchant, Should Be Made a Count.

Rome, Aug. 5.—Advices from Riese, the birthplace of Pius X and a village of 4,000 inhabitants, state that the pope's mother, now dead, when living there occupied a small peasant's house, having in her humility always refused to live with her son Guiseppe, as even his modest establishment was considered by her to be too luxurious in comparison with what she was accustomed to.

The elder brother of the pope, Angelo, lives in the village of Dellegrazie, province of Mantua, being the postman of the district, and receiving $80 a year for his duties. He adds to his income by keeping a shop in which he sells tobacco and pork. His two daughters are the belles of the village, being known for miles around as the "handsome Sarto sisters."

When Pius X was bishop of Mantua, his brother Angelo used often to go there for reasons connected with his postal service. The other clerks would ask him jokingly why his brother did not find him a better position. Angelo, with sturdy independence, answered that he preferred only to be what he could make himself. Still, following papal precedents, the tobacconist and postman of Dellegrazie should become a Roman count.

How the Balloting Proceeded.

Rome, Aug. 5.—All the members of the sacred college declare that they are very well satisfied with the election of Cardinal Sarto, but the anti-Rampolla faction consider it as their special victory.

When the first ballot was taken it showed that the sacred college was divided into two groups, the stronger one for Rampolla and another not quite so strong for Serafino Vannutelli. The other votes included four for Sarto.

On the subsequent ballots Sarto gradually gained, drawing strength from both sides in the ballot Monday afternoon, when his vote had increased to 37. When the result of this ballot was announced in the conclave, Cardinal Sarto was so overcome with emotion and so touched by the unanimity of votes proposed in him that he could no longer control his feelings and to the surprise of all broke down, declaring that such responsibility and honor were not for him and he was completely unnerved. Tears rolled down his cheeks and he seemed firm in his determination to refuse the dignity.

He was so palpably sincere that consternation reigned in the conclave and the cardinals spent the whole evening and far into the night in convincing him that his election was the will of Providence and that he must accept. Several times he almost fainted and had to be revived by the use of salts. He seemed happy but broken down even after all the other candidates had retired, and on the final ballot he looked a state of resignation.

Cardinal Casetta as scrutineer was reading out the vote. When 42 votes had been recorded for the patriarch of Venice the scrutineer arose and lifted his red succhetto, saying: "Habemus pontificem."

Cardinals cried out: "Continue." As the vote approached 50, however, the cardinals, as of one accord, surrounded the new pontiff and according to tradition, demanded to know if he would accept the pontificate. Cardinal Sarto's lips trembled so that he could hardly articulate but after a visible effort he said: If this cup cannot pass from me ——." There he paused, but the cardinals around him insisted that it was necessary for him to answer "Yes" or "No." Thereupon he replied firmly: "I accept."

Cardinal Gibbons, speaking to a representative of the press, said that the election of Sarto had produced the best impression in the entire sacred college. Being a man of such piety, tact and culture that he was best fitted to be the head of the church at the present time. Cardinal Gibbons hopes that the coronation of Pius X will take place soon in order that the foreign cardinals may be able to assist. Others think that the coronation may be postponed for three months to a more propitious time.

There is much speculation regarding the political attitude of the new pope. The general opinion, however, is that he will make no change in the relations between the Vatican and the Quirinal, except perhaps to render them more courteous, inasmuch as he enjoys a personal acquaintance with the king and members of the royal family. Queen Margheritta considers him almost a friend.

One of his first steps certainly will be to ameliorate the relations of the Vatican and France and try to prevent a similar struggle against the congregations in Spain.

He is not credited with being particularly favorable to Austria, as he still remembers how much his fatherland suffered under the domination of that country.

Pius X admires the progress of Catholicism in America and considers the United States a most fertile field for religion. The cardinals mentioned as likely to be appointed secretary of state are Ferrata, prefect of the congregation of bishops; Cavagnis and Vincenzo Vannutilli, bishop of Palestrina.
