The action of the United States does not seem to meet the approval of the European Powers in the Chinese imbroglio. We have none of the aspirations that prompt the other Powers so far as territorial aggrandizement is concerned and wherever the objects for which our flag was refurled in the Orient are accomplished, we ought to withdraw. By so doing we will not stultify our expressed object in the beginning, and we will also win the lasting regard of the Chinese themselves. We accuse the Chinese of treachery and a disregard of treaties, but they are filled with the belief that other nations are intriguing for their territory which naturally leads to intrigue on their part. Let the United States show by their course that they are not in a war for conquest.

This is the Latest.

We clip the following new version of the 23d Psalm, which is worth considering at the present time: "The politician is my shepherd; I shall not want any good thing during the campaign. He leaketh me to the saloon for my vote's sake; he filleth my pocket with good cigars; my glass of beer runneth over. He prepared my ticket in the presence of my judgment. Yea, tho I walk thru the mud and the rain to vote for him, and shout myself hoarse when he is elected, straitway he forgetteth me; lo, when I met him in his office, he knoweth me not. Surely the wool has been pulled over mine eyes all the days of my life."

A Philadelphia paper tells a story of a banker in that city who was visited by the strange hallucination that he had hair growing in his throat. Doctor after doctor examined him, telling him he was fooled, but it did not make any difference. Finally a clever young surgeon snipped a couple of hairs from his wrist surreptitiously in an ante-room, fastened them to the end of an instrument, put it down the banker's throat, gave it a little jab and pulled it out again with the hair, sure enough, and at the end of it. The banker is cured.

An overzealous preacher ran afoul of Oklahoma methods recently and is now under the doctor's care. The farmers of his neighborhood deemed it necessary to work on Sunday in order to save their wheat. The preacher organized a posse of tenderfeet like himself and endeavored to stop the work. As soon as the farmers realized what it was all about they stopped their work for a few minutes and then the preacher was dumped into a wagon and carried to doctor's office for repairs.

There is in Hanover county, Va., an institution whose object is to take negro boys convicted of crime, save them from the evil influences of the state prison, give them a good trade and make of them good and useful citizens. This institution was established with money furnished by Collis P. Huntington.

An Ohio paper says: "John Turnipseed died suddenly on Thursday morning, and on Friday was planted in Maple cemetery, there to rest until he comes up on the Resurrection day." Through some oversight the makeup man got the item in the obituary instead of the agricultural column.

Connecticut's secretary of the state board of health reports that nearly all the 400 infants who died in that state in July were the victims of unwholesome milk and other unsuitable food.

A woman who died recently in Brooklyn at the age of 99 had seen nine generations of her family, extending from her great-great-grandfather to her great-great-grandson.

It has been known for many years that the most fertile cause of heart tabletness of disease is rheumatism. Only recently Rheumatism has it been realized, however, that many cases of rheumatism which give rise to heart complications really run so mild a course that they are not suspected of being serious and are neglected. This, says a medical authority, is especially true in cases which attack the very young. In children rheumatism often masquerades under the name of "growing pains." In infants it often fails completely of recognition. It has become the custom to a lamentable degree to give for it the coal-tar derivatives, the various antipyretic drugs, antipyrine, phenacetine and the like, besides various derivatives of salicylic acid. These drugs alleviate the rheumatic pain by benumbing the nerves; they also lessen fever. The result of their use is that patients are enabled to move about much sooner than they otherwise would, and this throws extra work on the heart, and leads to post-rheumatic heart complications which may cripple the organ for life. The recent increase in the number of refusals of risks by life insurance companies is thought to be due to this cause. Doctors from many parts of the world deprecate the present excessive use of these drugs. Pain is nature's demand for rest. To allay it without reaching its cause is to drug the sentinel who watches over the citadel of health because his footsteps disturb our sleep.

A man's financial status is thus fixed by the general run of men: When a man owes $2.30 and doesn't pay it at the end of a week, he never pays his debts; if the $2.30 runs five weeks, "he's a dead beat;" if he has divers hundreds of unsettled accounts on the yearly clean-up of the tradesmen's books, "he is temporarily embarrassed;" if he gets his relatives and friends to indorse his paper and leaves them to settle, "he is in financial difficulties;" if he steals right and left and enough lawfully, he may be accused of "hypothecating his collaterals;" if he wrecks a few friends, and, better, a few public institutions, where the amount runs into six figures, "he is an unfortunate financier, with, however, a great future before him."

At last Stephen C. Foster, the greatest song writer the United States has produced, is to have a monument, in bronze and granite. It will be erected at Pittsburgh, where he was born and resided the most of his life. It will be unveiled next Wednesday in Highland park, and 3,000 school children will sing some of Foster's 160 melodies. All the orchestral music chosen is of his composition. The monument represents Foster in ordinary dress at work on a song. At his feet a barefooted slave is seated, playing a banjo, and typifying the sentiment of the "Suwanee River." Foster was entirely self-taught in music, and, when composing, used a violin. He died in 1864, at the age of 38.

St. Louis, Boston and Baltimore were close competitors in the census of 1890, ranking in the order named, with a total respectively of 451,770, 448,477 and 434,439. None of the three has changed its boundaries during the last ten years, and the comparison to be made in the present census will therefore be exact in this respect. At the beginning of the century St. Louis had a population of less than 1,000, and in 1810, one year after incorporation, only 1,400. Baltimore in that year was a city of 35,583 inhabitants, and Boston's population was 33,250. In 1840, when St. Louis had reached a total of only 16,469, the population of Baltimore was 102,313 and of Boston, 93,383. In 1860 the population of the three cities was: Baltimore, 212,218; Boston, 177,840; St. Louis, 160,773. The closest rivals of St. Louis are splendid growing cities, but the margin in favor of the metropolis of the Mississippi is not likely to be reversed unless, temporarily, by wholesale annexations.

Walker F. Cutting, of Baldwinsville, Mass., is not a man to be worried by trifles. He was riding homeward on a Boston and Maine express train the other evening, and the night being hot went out on the rear platform. His hat was blown off and in attempting to recover it he lost his balance and fell from the train, which was traveling 40 miles an hour. A passenger saw him fall, but before the engineer could be notified the train had reached Baldwinville. The engine was at once detached and sent down the road to bring in the body. The crew shortly saw Cutting walking quietly along the track, still smoking the cigar which was between his teeth when he tumbled off. He was uninjured. He had recovered his hat, too.

72 Years Old.

A party of relatives and friends of David B. Lee gathered at his home, one and one-half miles east of Andover, on September 18th, to help him celebrate his 72d birthday. At noon they all sat down to a bountiful dinner, after which the day was passed in visiting until late in the afternoon, when they departed to their several homes, wishing Mr. Lee many more happy birthdays.

At the close of the morning service at the M. E. church last Sunday it was announced that a deficiency of some $228 was reported by those having the church finances in hand. Inside of twenty minutes the entire amount was raised, thus leaving everything clear of debt, and showing the united feeling between its members.

If the country editor were to snap at all the inducements held out he would soon be a millionaire. If he ran a paper in accord with the popular notion he would soon be in the alms-house. If he published half the items sent him he would be in jail one-half the time and in the hospital the other half.—Davis (W. Va.) Republican.

The firm of J. L. Williams & Co., merchants, has been dissolved, Sidney Crandall of Belmont purchasing Mr. Farley's interest. The firm hereafter will be known as Williams & Crandall. The Epworth League, Group Meeting, comprising the towns of Andover, Belmont, Genesee, Angelica, Friendship, Scio, Whitesville and Wellsville, will convene at Friendship on Friday and Saturday of this week. We notice the names of three persons from Andover who will participate on the program: Jesse L. Grantier, Dr. John Common and Miss Edith Brainard.

We wish to call the attention of those who are not aware of the fact that Alfred is no longer without a hotel. C. L. Shaw is now running a first-class hotel there, everything up-to-date and convenient, and a more hospitable landlord will be hard to find. Just drop in and see him the next time you are over. He makes a specialty of caring for the traveling public in first-class manner.

Last Saturday evening a little accident at the Mangle Roller Factory caused considerable excitement. The tar in the large kettle used to heat it boiled over and splashed into the fire underneath, thus setting ablaze the entire contents of the kettle. "The pusher" blew a fire alarm and the rush for the hose cart and fire extinguishing apparatus was made on double quick time. With a very little effort the fire was controlled before doing any damage other than consuming the tar itself.

Miss Harriet May Mills was introduced to a fair sized audience in the Presbyterian church Thursday afternoon by Mrs. S. J. Fowler in her usual easy and graceful manner. The lecture of Miss Mills, which was about an hour in length, was fluent, enthusiastic and convincing. Her subject was on "The New Citizen," and was handled by her as if she had studied her subject and knew all about it. There were several in the audience, we are told, who came away strongly in favor of woman suffrage.

Band Concert.

Altho the weather was a mite chilly to stand on the streets last Saturday evening, the large concourse of people assembled to listen to the excellent music by the Excelsior Cornet Band, spoke in loud praise of the estimable reputation this band possesses in the heart of every Andoverian. The rendering of that wonderful band piece by W. P. Chambers, "Religioso," or "Onward, Christian Soldier," in march time, was just perfect, as was also the various other selections. Next Saturday evening, weather permitting, the band will give another of their popular concerts.

Burial Device.

Ever up-to-date, Fowler & Smith, embalmers and funeral directors, have added to their superior undertaking equipment a new and costly burial device. It was used for the first time in lowering a casket into the grave at the burial of C. C. Colegrove, Saturday. This device takes away all that harshness so harrassing to the nerves of grief-stricken ones by the use of the old-time straps in lowering the body of their dead into the grave. This is the only device in use in this vicinity and is the best that could be obtained. It is operated by the foot of the undertaker standing at the head of the grave, unobserved by any one, and the smoothness with which it works makes those witnessing hardly realize that the casket is being lowered

To the Ladies of Andover and vicinity:

I have a nice stock of goods bought for spot cash. I will be pleased to show them whether you are ready to buy or not. My regular opening days will be Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 3d and 4th.
