Andover, N. Y.

Andover, N. Y., October 24, 1900

VOL. XXIII. $1.00 a Year in Advance

Ten cents per line for each insertion for notices of entertainments, dances, donations, fairs, sales, socials—anything from which money is realized, be it proceeds for private or public, charitable or other benefit.

No charge for lines for resolutions of respect.

One dollar will be charged for cards of thanks of any kind or sort.

Lists of wedding presents, five cents a line.

Advertising rates will be made known upon application, in person or by letter, at the office.

Two weeks more of strife and the great political battle will be over. All parties are nerved up for the final clash of arms on the sixth of November, and the Republic will live, which ever side wins. The tension on the minds of candidates, with hope pulling one way and fears the other, must be hard to endure, but let us all be thankful that the end is nigh. Honors cost about their market value.

This evening the cricket is singing his autumnal song, recounting his summer deeds and chanting the pleasures of the season that is nearly past. It is the harbinger of winter and increased gas bills, and there is a sadness in the music on account thereof. To think of watching the gasometer rolling up its debtor account until the days "when the spring time comes, Gentle Annie" makes life take on a somber hue.

The Banner Wind Yarn.

In the heated August term it is refreshing to hear stories of great winds and cyclones. John de Yar, the artist, used to live in Kansas, and likes to talk about such things in sweltering weather, relates the Philadelphia Record. "In the path of a cyclone," he will say, "I once saw a telegraph pole which had been pierced clean through by a straw, driven right through 12 inches of wood by the wonderful force of the wind, and with an end sticking out at each side. For weeks at a time, in Kansas a mighty wind will blow steadily from one direction. That is what keeps the people thin—the fear and worry of the constant blowing of the wind. Against a barn door fronting this wind you can throw a pitchfork of loose hay, and the wind will hold the hay there for days and days—hold it there as tough it were glued. I have seen fences and telegraph poles coated with pebbles till not a bit of the wood was visible. The wind of a cyclone hurls the pebbles onward with such force, you know, that they imbed themselves in whatever they strike."

Uncle Sam's Honesty.

A reunion was held near Topeka and apparently it was a temperance affair. But a long-headed individual who was present proceeded to turn his knowledge of human nature and appreciation of a good thirst into dollars and cents. He bought some tea, steeped it, and poured the result into bottles, which he concealed about his person. Then he chose his victims and approached them confidentially and philanthropically. The interview then proceeded as follows: "Want something?" "Wouldn't mind." "Got a pint here." "How much do you want?" "Fifty cents." "Is it whisky?" "Call it whisky if you want. I call it tea." "Here's the money." One of the victims squealed, but the long-headed individual could not be touched by the law, for there's nothing against selling tea in Kansas.

George Resoner, of Muncie, Ind., the other day received a five-cent check from the treasury department at Washington in payment of an excess settlement made by him 14 years ago, when he was postmaster of Wheeling, a small town four miles northwest of Muncie. At that time Resoner made his usual monthly report and settlement through the Cincinnati post office. He sent in five cents too much once, but did not know of it until the other day, when the check came, accompanied by a letter of explanation. This was the first time that Resoner knew he had given Uncle Sam much money. He says the government will still be indebted on its books to the Wheeling post office. He does not intend to cash the check, but will have it framed and hung over his desk as a souvenir of his carelessness and honesty.

Proper Education.

"We are parents—possibly we are parents—who bring up children "along the lines of least resistance" and "of least resistance," says Dean Briggs, of Harvard university, in the Atlantic and we know what the children are. It is illogical to infer that children taught at school "along the lines of least resistance" are intellectually spoiled children, flabby of mind and will? For any responsible work we want men of character—not men who from childhood up have been personally conducted and have had their education warped to the indolence of their minds. It is necessary to treat people as individuals; but it does them a world of good sometimes to treat a great many of them together, and to let them get used to it as best they may. The first lesson of life, as Lowell reminds us, is to burn our own smoke; that is, not to inflict on outsiders our personal sorrows and petty morbidness, not to keep thinking of ourselves as "exceptional cases." The sons of our wealthiest citizens may be educated in either of two ways: They may be sent to school, or they may be turned over to governesses and private tutors. Anyone who has observed them in college knows how much better educated those are who have gone to school—how the very wealth which enables a parent to treat his son as in all ways exceptional and to give him the most costly and carefully adjusted education which he can devise, defeats its own end.

A new piece of household furniture is the family weighing-machine. Some are made in the form of graceful chairs, upholstered in blue or white leather to match the bath-room decorations, and some are artistic studies in walnut and tapestry for the ornamentation of the hallway, the machinery being concealed as far as possible or made highly ornamental. The reason for the introduction of the machine is the new theory that it is flesh that tells whether one is well or ill more truthfully even than color or appetite or ill feelings. Mothers are instructed to put their children on the scales every morning, keep a close record of the fluctuations, and once in three weeks turn the tables of weights over to the family doctor, who will draw inferences therefrom.

A bread factory being erected in Milwaukee is to have some novel, but very desirable sanitary features. All the ingredients are to be tested in a laboratory before being used. The bakers will work in full view of the public, at long tables stationed in front of wide plate-glass windows. Each man will be required to wear a special suit of clothes provided by the management, and to take at least one bath a day in the bathroom that is connected with the lockers on the upper floor. Moreover, he may not smoke, chew or drink, and be a worker in the bread factory.

The plant that turns out millions of postal cards every month for Uncle Sam is located in a little West Virginia mountain town, high up in the Appalachian range, not far from the border line of Maryland. The town is Piedmont, Mineral county, and the busy factory is at work six days in the week. Here the cardboard is made from the fresh, sweet spruce trees; here it is cut into the requisite sizes, and here the cards are printed, packed and shipped.

On the brow of a lofty peak of the Sierra Nevada mountains is a signal station in which, day after day, a woman sits with field-glass in hand. She is watching for fires that might break out in the snowsheds that skirt the railroad through the rocky wilds. By day Mrs. Paul Reicke is on guard, and at night her husband watches. Should a small flame pass unnoticed for an hour the whole chain of sheds might be consumed and the tracks endangered.

The novel question whether counsel, in an argument to the jury, has a right to shed tears, has been decided by the supreme court of Tennessee in the case of Ferguson vs. Moon, the court holding that if the tears are available it is not only proper but the duty of counsel to shed them on the appropriate occasion. The weeping was done in a breach of promise case by the counsel for the plaintiff.

Perhaps the shortest will ever admitted to probate in Kansas was that of Mr. J. W. Stevens, who died recently in Wilson county. Here is the will entire: "This is my last will, and I wish the land to be divided as mapped off on the other side of this sheet, and the personal property to be equally divided."

An examination of the census returns shows that the greatest growth in the population of the country has been in the eastern states and that most of the cities which have had the

On the lawns of some of the fashionable country homes has been seen this summer a new sort of furniture, which is really a revival of the old-fashioned massive chairs and tables that were the delight of our great grandparents for out of door use. The roomy benches and chairs are made with square, heavy supports and uprights that give them an appearance, at least, of ability to support a ton. They are made of hard wood, which in the modern process of manufacture is treated with some chemical stain that acts as a preservative against wet and weather. They come in shades of green, and to have one or two of the big armchairs of the set stained a bright scarlet is effective if judiciously disposed.

"The natural end of a tutor is to perish by starvation," says a writer in the Hartford Courant. "It is only a question of time, just as with the burning of college libraries. These all burn up sooner or later, provided they are not housed in brick or stone and iron. I don't mean that you will see in the registry of deaths that this or that particular tutor died of well-marked, uncomplicated starvation. They may even in extreme cases be carried off by a thin, watery kind of apoplexy, which sounds very well in the returns but means little to those who know that it is only debility settling on the head."

Uncle Sam has a regular contributor to the general fund of the government. Promptly the first week of every quarter a check for $75 is received at the treasury department, with a request that it be placed in the miscellaneous fund of the treasury, from which it can only be withdrawn by a special act of congress. The money is from a veteran of the civil war. He is an employe of the Philadelphia mint. He explained in his letter that as long as the government employed him at a good salary he would not accept the pension.

G. W. Wescott had what came near being a very serious accident happen to him the other day in his shop. While working at a long rod of steel tightened in a vice, in some way it sprung from the vice and struck him square in the face, inflicting a deep wound just at the left of his left eye.

Frank H. Mott of Jamestown addressed a crowded house at Prest's Opera House last Thursday evening. While the editors of the News do not agree politically with Mr. Mott, we cannot refrain from stating that in our opinion he gave the best Democratic speech we ever heard. Mr. Mott is a born orator.

The Village Board acted upon the suggestion of the News of last week, and placed a police force in operation Saturday night, much to the happiness of those who were trying to obtain a night's sleep. Andover has not been so quiet after 10 o'clock on a Saturday night for years. The services should be extended to every night in the week.

Mr. Guy Wood, who has been at Ellenville, N. Y., for the past year has secured a position with the Supple Hardware Co., of Philadelphia and will represent them thru Western New York and North West Pennsylvania. His many friends here will be pleased to hear that after Dec. 1st, he will again make his home in Wellsville.—Reporter.

Hornellsville has a new journalistic venture that made its appearance last Saturday. It is called "The Labor Journal," and consists of twelve neatly printed pages 9x12 inches. It is the official paper of the United Trades and Labor Council, and has the appearance of a paper that has come to stay. The publishers are Wilkins & Gibson.

The New York State Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Bath, thru its commandant, gives out the following statement for the information of those seeking admission there: "The home has a membership to-day of 1,615, nearly its full capacity. No one desiring admission should present himself until he or his friends have written the home authorities and been assured of acceptance. This will save trouble, expense and disappointment if adhered to."

He kissed the baby and rubbed the heads of Sue and Sam and swore the twins were beautiful and wished he had two—but that don't count. He highly praised the bread that he vainly tried to chew, and forthwith begged for the receipt, of course, that tickled ma—but that don't count. But just before he left he stopped, and winking, closed his jaw, then slid around behind the barn and gave a drink to pa—and that's what counts.

A. M. Burrows is doing a fine thing not only for himself, but for his neighbors on either side of his store property, and the village itself in laying a 13 inch tile, large enough for a city sewerage, along his property adjoining his store. Now the lower end of the ditch should be cleaned out and enlarged, and the people on East Center street should take the matter up and extend it the same size until there will be no further danger of damage to residents every time a little heavy rainfall happens to come our way. This surface water has been a great nuisance to the people living on Center street for many years, and since Mr. Burrows has had the enterprise to go at it alone, at his own expense, we should think the village and others interested would make a complete job of the matter.

CANNON'S STORE NEWS.

So many new things to tell of it's hard to know where to begin, just as hard to know where to leave off after we've got started. There's a hundred articles deserves print room. If the goods you particularly want are not mentioned, it is safe to say that we have them just the same, and the prices are pretty sure to please you.

UNDERWEAR.

People generally know the values we give in this department. For ladies there's the Egyptian cotton, ribbed in a good heavy weight at 25c. (and that's about as cheap as it is safe to go). These grades run into the extra sizes too, and no extra charge is made for them.

The kind that sells best in children's is the cotton with heavy fleecing. They come in vests and pants and drawers for the boys. The prices on this line are less than they've ever been before.

For men the fleeced garments are the favorites. We've an excellent one, heavy and warm, wool fleeced, at 48c. The shirts are ribbed at the bottom, the drawers well-shaped.

DRY GOODS.

Just 30 women's winter waists, an agent's samples. A discount from wholesale prices was given us. The wholesale price is offered you. Take your pick from the north window.

All say our stock of black goods is splendid for a small town. Have you looked them over?

SHOES.

For two dollars we give a man's serviceable, stylish shoe with five different lasts to choose from.

For two fifty the Valour Calf that takes on a polish like the vici, but does not scuff nor peel

In women's the assortment and qualities offered at $2.00 are the best we've ever done. Four distinct lasts, heavy or light soles. Every pair built expressly for us, and for a price not usually paid by retailers for a shoe to sell at $2.00.

MEN'S WEAR.

Hats in all the latest styles, soft and stiff. The monarch shirts in the newest fall patterns and coloring. A big new assortment of neckwear this week. Gloves of Mocha in the fashionable greys. The smart things in collars always. Sweaters in plain colors and stripes. Jersey shirts, a big stock at from 39c to $1 each. A good duck coat, heavy lined, for a dollar. Mittens of most every sort and low priced. Snag proof boots the best in the world, new stock, every size and width.

CLOTHING.

Men's suits of cheviots, cassimeres, plain and fancy worsted, materials that are dependable. Style and fit that tailors can't beat. The values at $7, $8, $9 and $10 are hard to match and nowhere beaten. Our children's suits for fall are handsomer, better and lower-priced than ever before. We ask no more than to show you. May we do that?

P. CANNON AND SON.

ANDOVER'S CASH HOUSE.

WALL PAPE SLAUGHTER.

We have placed the largest order ever bought in Andover of Wall Paper for Fall and Spring trade, and have no room to put it on its arrival, so it will necessitate closing out our line already on hand:

10c. brown backs, at 5c., double roll.
15c. white backs, at 7½c., double roll.
18 and 20c. white backs, at 9 and 10c., double roll.
25c. gilts, at 12½ and 15c., double roll.
35c. gifts (embossed), at 20c., double rolls.

This means less than cost; but must be closed out.

Remnants of paper with sufficient border for the paper, at ridiculous low prices. For two weeks this special sale will be on, and longer if necessary.
