UNEXPECTEDLY.

It's the unexpected things happening about us that leave their impressions upon our minds and stir us into activity, sometimes causing us to do that which was thought impossible, and bringing about results beneficial alike to ourselves and others. It was little thought a year ago that it was possible to secure for Andover an industry. It had been tried so often and so persistently by the loyal men and women that almost all had despaired, and yet the unexpected happened when the silk mill was secured. Now the plans and specifications are at hand and soon the sound of the workman's tools will be heard thruout the village. It is hoped that it will prove a boom in every sense to every part of the community. Perhaps it will mean a New Andover, and certainly that will be an unexpected quantity.

UNEXPECTED MEANNESS.

The expediencies some people will resort to are surprising. Down in Monroetown, Pa., has been found the man who should have the record for ingenious meanness. The man's wife, Mrs. Brague, notified the county poor board that her husband had deserted her and if bread were not furnished her she would starve. So the county furnished food to the deserted wife But Brague's father, becoming alarmed over his son's absence, asked the police to find him. The house was searched, and Brague was discovered in the attic, fat and hearty. His wife confessed that he had made her tell the story of desertion in order that they might get support from the county. Brague laughed heartily, but was inclined to be on the outs with his father for allowing his paternal affection to run away with his judgment. That surely is a specimen of champion smallness, and the only thing the man will probably regret is that he got caught in his little game.

FATE CUTS QUEER CAPERS.

Never was the irony of fate more clearly illustrated than is a dispatch from Washington which says that the magnificent sideboard which the young women of Cincinnati presented to Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes, when she was the mistress of the White House, as a token of their approval of her action in barring wine from the presidential dinners, now stands in a Washington beer garden as a resting place for foaming steins. The proprietor bid it in at the recent White House auction for $85. Surely there is something wrong in this: that the authorities would permit such a thing to be sold. Respect for the donors should have prevented; but after all, time brings its changes.

WOULDN'T IT BE?

An unexpected occurrence if a boom should be given to the village in the erection of a number of new houses this spring, and yet it may be that such a move will occur. If fifty families should move in there would be no place to put them, and that might hinder growth. One of the prospects, most pleasing indications, is the way in which men are taking hold of the question, and it will develop in the future that the business men have met the condition in a careful and logical manner, and the future growth will be slow, but surely a valuable growth. The men will develop into men with as sharp business accumen as any the world round.

NEW CONDITIONS.

Unexpectedly some may awake to find new conditions confronting them. The need of enlarged vision and wider outlook upon public questions will certainly force itself upon the careful student of village conditons. There may be many things to be done. What if the new conditions demand that fire alarm, there ought to be men ready to meet the question and decide it. The question of increase in business will mean new ways of doing business, for the older ways will have to give way to the demand of new comers that may desire better and perhaps different classes of goods. The widewakes persons will see the new conditions and be ready to meet the demands.

IT DID HAPPEN.

That the rich men who control large industries are ready to meet their share of the burdens of government, municipal or village expense, was unexpectedly demonstrated the other day, when J. Pierpont Morgan and the Vanderbilts appeared before the assessors in New York city and said their taxes were not enough, and openly proclaimed the fact that they were ready to stand their share o. the burdens. That's a true American spirit. It's indicative of "live and let live" policy. Every person who enjoys the privileges of protection and conveniences that come in modern city or village life can't afford to be a "tax dodger." The men who have these matters in charge are usually fair men, and the true American spirit is to take a hand in sharing the burdens. Sometimes the assessors can tell more about petty tricks in the endeavor to dodge taxes than some of us know.

THE EXPECTED.

Some perhaps have opined that the old village could go on forever in the old, old way. It could not be. The younger people go away from the hills and come back with new ideas. They pride themselves that "Allegany" is worthy of the best, and then set to work to accomplish it. Their example is worthy of emulation. It's local pride. It's patriotism, love for home, and when we awaken from the sleep of the old days we will find that the unexpected has come.

AND NOW.

Only a few months and the old will have seemed to have been a dream. The vigor with which the Business Men's Association has carried forward the projects at their disposal has brought forward a class of business men unequaled anywhere, aroused dormant talents, and placed Andover in the list of the wideawake twentieth century villages, and if Andover does not grow, the shock will come unexpectedly to QUIEN SABE?

The Folly of Breathing.

The declaration of Dr. Albert T. Atkins, lecturer on the principles of medicine of the California Medical college, that electricity and not oxygen purifies the blood in the lungs, opens the way for hygienic reform of incalculable benefit to mankind. According to the learned doctor, no oxygen gets through the membrane of the lungs into the blood stream. The air cells secrete carbon, he tells us, and the oxygen and carbon of the coughing cause combustion, thus generating electric currents. It is the electricity that does the business.

The process is so simple that it is surprising that people will go on breathing in soft coal smoke and the dust of unswept streets when by simply connecting themselves with convenient batteries they might put their lungs out of commission and bid defiance to catarrh and the hangman. Breathing is foolish, to say the least. A vast majority of the world's wisest and greatest men quit it long ago, and all the rest of us will sooner or later drop the habit. Why not equip ourselves with pocket batteries that would cost perhaps but the trivial sum of $1.25, thus supplying the system with ready made electricity in place of that generated by means of the combustion occurring way down in our interior oconomy every time we breathe?

This constant combustion is indelicate. Just think of a beautiful girl placidly looking a man in the face with oxygen, nitrogen and carbon combusting right along in her lungs. Besides, it is unnecessary and wasteful. The human throat was made for swallowing food and drink only and not for taking in oxygen and nitrogen and, incidentally, the poisonous germs and other things with which the air is impregnated for the sole purpose of producing combustion for electric generation when artificial electricity is almost as cheap and a good deal better. Dr. Atkins has done well to show the world the folly of it all.

Forests and Irrigation.

In the last report of the commission of the general land office at Washington the following statement is made:

Irrigated agriculture, as representing the leading industry in the future of a vast portion of the country, and in particular of the arid region, is rapidly forcing to the front the question of irrigation as one of the great national issues of the day, since without water there can be no agriculture, and in like manner the need for irrigation is equally forcing to the front the question of forest preservation, since without forests there can be no water. Forests are an essential factor in any scheme of irrigation of sufficient magnitude to contemplate the reclamation of our six or more millions of acres of irrigable lands which are now arid.

That irrigation depends upon the water supply and that the water supply depends upon the forests is potent, and the necessity of maintaining the forests for this if for no other reason is equally apparent. There are substitutes in plenty for wood in the construction of buildings, of barns and of fences, but there can be no substitute for agriculture. We must have wheat and corn and vegetables. The necessity of forest preservation for the reclamation of the great areas of public lands now wholly arid in the new states and territories finds an equal demand in the older states, where land now arable is in danger of becoming arid by the destruction of the forests. If the fertility of our soil is to be maintained, the forests must be preserved.

An ingenious dueling sword was shown the other day in Paris by the well known fencer, M. Hissard, to the members of the Societe d'Escrime a Epee. By a novel arrangement when the fencer touches his opponent the blade of the sword enters the handle a short distance and sets a marker in motion, which registers any number from cipher to three. The idea of the invention is to prevent disputes between fencers and enable them to judge of the value of their coups. Moreover, this sort of sword would be very useful in real duels fought in France.

The house of representatives passed 234 private pensions and military record bills the other day. Thus it seems that the house can legislate fast enough when it gets started, and it ought to get started on some of the more important matters before it.

A murder trial in Carbondale, Ill., has been delayed by the illness of a juror. Why did not the court exercise its prerogative and issue an injunction restraining the juror from being sick?

Coal inquiries are more or less interesting; but when the facts are all known the consumer is still likely to be confronted with the question, What are you going to do about it?

At a charity bazaar in Chicago the other day Marshall Field gave $1,000 for three wienerwuerste he had eaten. Perhaps he knew that the dog had been a valuable one.

The Venezuela affair has at least enriched the vernacular with this trite simile: "As inaccurate as a German gunner."

Amendments to the Bankruptcy Law.

The changes made in the national bankruptcy law in the passage by congress of the bill for its amendment are in the line of ameliorating the conditions of the bankrupt, though they do not apparently in any degree make it easier for dishonest debtors to defraud their creditors. The fees taxable under the amended law are reduced so as to make bankruptcy proceedings less expensive, and provision is made that bankruptcy indexes and dockets shall be open to public examination without charge.

A wise amendment is one prohibiting any person from getting rid of the payment of alimony or any debt of that kind under the bankruptcy act.

In interpreting the old law the federal supreme court held that a creditor could not prove his claim if he had received a payment on any debt against the debtor, provided the debtor's property was not equal to his debts. The payment might have been received innocently and in ignorance of the debtor's insolvency. That made no difference. It must be surrendered or the creditor could not prove an undisputed claim. The act as amended makes any payment made four months before the filing of the petition a preference, if the debtor was insolvent at the time. If the creditor had any reason to believe that it was intended as a preference he must surrender the property or its value.

Altogether the amendments will improve and strengthen the law and settle questions of long and troublesome dispute. The necessity of a federal bankruptcy code, operative in all the states of the Union, was long ago apparent, and thus amplified and perfected it should meet the conditions of business it is intended to cover with justice alike to the creditor and the insolvent debtor.

Baltimore's New Primary Law.

The city of Baltimore has a new primary election law, the operation of which may be of interest to other communities seeking reforms in election methods. It will receive its first practical test at the municipal elections this spring, and some defects may be developed by this test, though the general plan of the law seems to be admirable. The principal features are these:

First.—The primaries of both parties are held on the same day and in the same voting booths.

Second.—The ballot used is prepared by public officials, contains the names of all candidates alphabetically arranged, and is voted in secret.

Third.—Every citizen has a right to vote in the primaries of the party with which he prefers to be affiliated, the law expressly providing "that the statement of such party affiliation does not bind him to vote for the candidates of such party at any given election."

Apparently these provisions would do away with the abuses by which conscientious citizens are kept from voting in the primaries and corrupt ones are permitted to vote in them. The "floaters," as they are called, have still one vote, but they have no longer two or more, as the primaries of both parties are held together under the same safeguards as a regular election, and the citizen who is unwilling to do the bidding of party bosses can no longer be kept away from the primaries by a requirement that he must pledge himself to vote for all its nominees, however obnoxious to his moral sense.

Besides these provisions the new Baltimore law has another introducing the principle of direct primaries for the most important officer to be chosen at any election. If delegates to conventions are chosen, the name of the candidate they are pledged to support is printed above each list of delegates.

The traditional ground hog, when he came out the other day to disport himself in the open, could or could not have seen his shadow, according to the time and location of his observations. All of which indicates that we will have before the robins nest again more or less weather of various kinds, just as we always have between Candlemas day and corn planting time. Within the limits of our far flung thermometer line an American winter can put up a great variety of atmospheric conditions, over which neither the weather bureau nor the goosebone and woodchuck prophets have any considerable influence.

A Cleveland man was run over and badly injured the other day by two carriages in a wedding procession. As a rule weddings result disastrously to no one besides the persons married.

It would appear that some of the big gambling houses in New York get enough free advertising out of an occasional raid to fully offset its inconvenience.

After the smoke clears away and the financial disputes are settled Germany might do well to engage a few Venezuelan gunners to instruct its navy.

WILL BE MARRIED FEB. 18

A Popular Andover Man to Wed A Rexville Lady.

The bands for the marriage of Miss Minnie Riley of Rexville to W. F. O'Connell of this village have been called. The ceremony will take place at St. Mary's church, Rexville, Wednesday, Feb. 18th. James O'Connell of Binghamton, brother of the groom, and Miss Louise Corran of Genesee, Pa., will attend them. After a short wedding trip they will make their home at Andover. The best wishes of the NEWS are extended.

Surprise Party.

The friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge Witter gave them a very pleasant surprise Saturday evening. About forty were present. Among those from out of town were Dell Hawkins and Lady and Richard Hammond and wife. Refreshments were served and with plenty of good music the company passed a very enjoyable evening.

Father Rengel Home.

Rev. E. J. Rengel returned Saturday morning from his four weeks cruise in and around the West Indies. He reports a lovely trip. The NEWS has hopes of persuading him to write some interesting reminiscences of his journeyings.

A Successful Business Man.

F. A. Owen, of the F. A. Owen publishing company, Dansville, N. Y., is in this village to day, guest of Postmaster W. B. Bundy. His company are the publishers of the now famous "Normal Instructor" and of "World's Events." To illustrate what push and enterprise can do, Mr. Owen's career need only be studied. Starting in with scarcely no capital, save pluck, he has established and built one of the largest publication houses in this country. The output of his office has placed Dansville, N. Y., with only about 3,000 population, ninth in the list of second-class mail matter offices in the United States. This he has done only by hard work and knowledge of what his constituents wanted, and gave it them.

TAX PAYERS INDIGNANT.

A Lazy Specimen Supported by the County.

Allegany county tax-payers are not feeling overly jubilant that they are obliged to pay for the support at the County Jail at Belmont, of such specimens as Eugene Slate of Cuba. Slate refused to support his family, and the authorities sentenced him to a winter's free keep at the County's Jail. He is furnished with good food at the expense of the tax-payers from the Sheriff's larder and has many delicacies brought him. This is an imposition. Some way ought to be made to take care of such profligates without calling on honest working people to support such trash.

MAPLE ORCHARDS.

Not Hurt as Much as Expected.

Bert Sanford of Little Genesee was in Andover Wednesday and Thursday looking after second-hand sap buckets. Last season he purchased a number of them here, the farmers believing their sugar bushes ruined by the ice storm and maple worms. This year he had quite an effort to locate any for sale. The farmers, he says, find their maple orchards are not so badly injured as they had feared.

Knights Templar Anniversary.

The fiftieth anniversary of the organization of DeMolay Commandery, No. 22, Knights Templar, of Hornellsville, was appropriately celebrated Thursday evening. About 200 knights and their friends were present and elabarate festivities were carried out. A musical and literary program was rendered and dancing enjoyed during the evening. Andover was represented by E. J. Atwood, Dr. E. J. Laughlen and P. M. Swink.

No More Claret Soda Without a License.

The Treasury department has recently ruled that druggists who sell soda water or similar beverages to which any distilled spirits, wine or any compounds thereof are added, are required to pay special tax as retail liquor dealers under the internal revenue laws. This means as the ruling states that "Claret Soda" or alcoholic flavoring syrups are under the ban, and those who dispense them must pay the license as above stated.

Contractors In Town.

Twelve contractors have been in Andover the past week, looking over and studying the plans and specifications for the New Silk Mill. Others are expected this week. The bids will all be in early next week and a contract made with the lowest acceptable bidder for its construction.

ERIE DOING GOOD WORK.

The "Old Reliable" Prefers to Supply the People With Coal Rather Than Meat.

A general arrangement of the Erie railroad method of handling freight has come about by the Coal famine. For years this road has been running thru freight trains, carrying the large meat trusts refrigerator cars from Chicago to New York; giving it right of way over all other trains, excepting a few passenger and express trains. It was made a first class train. The Coal famine has made a radical change in all this. Knowing that meat would be of but little value unless fire could be had to cook it, they cancelled their contracts with the Swifts and Armours and dove into the coal hauling business with a vim.

The first move was to place all thru freight crews on the rounds. This, while it was an advantage to the getting the coal trains over the line with a rush, was very unpleasant to some of the men. One conductor was heard to remark the other day that eleven years ago he was promoted to conductor, but to-day he was nothing but a brakeman on the rounds.
