Modern Jarndyce vs. Jarndyce Case. Dickens' famous case of Jarndyce versus Jarndyce, satirizing the proceedings of the British court of chancery, seems likely to be eclipsed in actual litigation by the case of Sallie B. Hillmon against the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance company, in which the plaintiff seeks to recover from the company $5,000 insurance upon the life of her husband, who, she claims, died in 1879. Six juries have already passed upon the various points involved in the case, and now, by a ruling of the federal supreme court, it is sent back to the trial court for the seventh hearing.

The case, which originated in Kansas, where the plaintiff resides, has been before the public for twenty-four years in one form or another. Twice before it has found its way to the supreme court, which was called upon to pass upon disputed points of law. When Mrs. Hillmon first brought suit, there were three respondents—the New York Life, the Mutual Life and the Connecticut Mutual Life—and the aggregate of her claims was $25,000. She obtained judgment in the first hearing, whereupon the New York Life and the Mutual Life settled with her, paying her $10,000 each, leaving the Connecticut Mutual to fight it out alone, which it has been doing for nearly a quarter of a century without bringing the case to a finish.

Mrs. Hillmon in her original petition of March 17, 1879, contended that the provisions of the policy had been complied with and that her husband was dead and was buried on a certain date in Kansas. The respondent set up that her husband and two others conspired to defraud them by representing that Hillmon was dead and substituting a corpse for burial.

The case has figured in circuit courts, superior courts, appellate courts and the federal supreme court, and now it goes gayly and cheerfully back to the trial courts for a seventh hearing, and in due course of time, if nothing happens to prevent, it may find its way to the court of last resort again, possibly to go back for its eighth trial. As an example of persistency of litigants and of the law's delay the case of Sallie Hillmon versus the Connecticut Mutual Life stands out conspicuous in the annals of American jurisprudence, and it seems likely to go on indefinitely, as the last decision is likely to encourage the company to continue the fight while the aging plaintiff insists that she will not give up the battle as long as the breath of life is in her body.

Co-operation in New Jersey.

One grange in New Jersey reports purchases as follows for its members: Fertilizers, $23,000; potatoes, $5,000; seeds, $2,000; straw, $4,000, or about $34,000 in all for one grange. There are many other granges doing co-operative work along business lines in that state.

Paralysis Takes an Old and Respected Resident.

JACOB SCOTT DIED SATURDAY.

A Query Which is the Worse, to Violate Law or Help a Violater Escape.

Friday afternoon Jacob Scott was found in an unconscious condition back of the barn of Wayne Scott, his son. He had been at work around the barn, which was being repaired. He had appeared in his usual health all day. When found he lay on his back. They picked him up and carried him to the livery office, and summoned a doctor who said he had a shock. He was taken to his home at Riverside where he died Saturday morning about one o'clock. He was born in Hugenot, N. Y. in 1828 and moved to Wellsville in 1850 where he has since lived. He was one of the oldest residents of the town and was an upright and honorable business man; a good neighbor, a generous friend, a kind father and a loving husband. He was married in 1852 and leaves five children to survive him, Wayne, George, and Carrie of Wellsville; Henry of Scio, and a married daughter who lives in Illinois. The funeral was held from his late home Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, and was largely attended, the pastor of the Baptist church officiating.

It is a query in the mind of many of our people as to which is worse, to violate a law or to help a violator to escape when the officers try to arrest the culprit. A man by the name of Rice came to town a day or two ago and drove furiously up and down the pavement, almost running over two or three children. When Chief Boyd tried to arrest him, N. C. Dexter jumped in the wagon and drove off with him. Later Boyd secured his man on a warrant, and he was fined five dollars, but Dexter, the greater culprit, escaped with not even a reprimand. Seems as tho Judge Torrey should have read a little story of "common sense" to the fellow. Such things make for lawlessness. A good citizen will do everything possible to uphold the law.

Easter services were held in all the churches Sunday. Special sermons and special music were rendered by pastors and choirs. The Baptist Bible school rendered a very pleasing Easter service in the evening.

There is a large amount of moving this Spring. Quite a number are changing their place of residence, and others are moving into town. More would come if there were more houses to rent that were well located.

AN ACID FACTORY

One Reason For the Scarcity of Timber.

AN ACRE OF TIMBER A DAY.

Wood Alcohol, Acetate of Lime, Charcoal and Tar the Products of Hard Wood.

After returning from a few days visit with his daughter, N. E. Hardy of this place tells a News reporter of the business conducted by his son-in-law, D. M. Cooper, of Newton, Pa., which is interesting.

Mr. Cooper is superintendent of a large Acid Factory for Hamilton & Troy, of Newton Pa., the products of which are Charcoal, Acetate Lime, Wood Alcohol and Tar.

Dry, hard wood is cut into proper lengths and placed in large cast iron retorts and burned there by fire being built under and around this retort. The smoke is condensed into liquid form and from this is extracted wood alcohol and tar. The tar is burned in a boiler together with a certain amount of gas from the wood. This burned wood after being taken out is sold as charcoal, that is at present worth about 9 cents a bushel. A quantity of acetate lime is also secured which has a ready market.

In a cord of dry, hard wood is obtained twelve gallons of wood alcohol, 220 pounds of acetate lime, 56 bushels of charcoal besides the tar, and brings after being distilled, from $22 to $25.

A plant such as the one at Newton, takes forty cords of wood a day, or the timber from one acre of land to keep the wheels going round. The cost of this establishment is about $150,000 not inclucing the stock of wood. They give employment to 25 men at the works, six men loading wood, six unloading and piling it and about 70 cutting it, besides 18 men and 12 teams loading cars. It takes 300,000 cubic feet of gas per day to keep the retorts hot. They ship 45 cars of Charcoal, six cars of lime, four cars of alcohol per month. Their monthly payroll will amount to $4,500.

EASTER MASONIC SERVICE.

A LARGE ATTENDANCE AT THE BAPTIST CHURCH.

Andover Lodge, F. & A. M., and the O. E. S. Listen to a Forceful and Eloquent Sermon on the Resurrection.

The Baptist church was filled last Sunday evening with the Masons and their friends in attendance at divine worship. The platform was decorated with lilies and potted plants. The organist and choir rendered an excellent program of music, and the sermon by the pastor, Rev. Charles H. Harrington, was a forceful and eloquent discourse on "Lessons from the Resurrection." He took for his text Acts 2: 24 and John 20: 20, and he said in part:

I am to speak to you on lessons from the resurrection. The divine man has passed thru the difficulties that beset his pathway and thru the conflict in the garden, and after the worst that could be done by the direst foe of human kind thru the death on the cross, he arose from the dead to show men a new ideal, that godliness, uprightness, virtue and true manliness would conquer. One evening he appeared to his disciples and it is recorded, "When they saw the Lord they were glad." No plummet has ever sounded the depths or word that ever expressed the meaning of the gladness of the resurrection, for they attempt to describe that which is forever indescribable. The leap of the human heart from deepest woe to greatest gladness. I have stood, as every one of you have done, gazing out upon the fields and woodlands during a storm. Unutterable melancholy in every aspect. Dreariness of death was everywhere. Gloom, gray and grim, enshrouded tree and hill. Not even the chirping of a safe sheltered bird to break the saddening spell. The winds alone had heart to sing, and they sang only dirges. Even as I watched a change was swiftly coming. The clouds began to part. The sun came bursting thru. The grim was all transferred to gold. The fields seem to laugh aloud, and, catching some new note, forth from a thousand trees there swept the birds to chant a "Jubilate." How feebly this expresses what sometimes happens to human hearts. In the darkness God said "Let there be light." But, my friends, there are two kinds of resurrection, the natural and artificial, like two kinds of waking out of sleep. Lazarus and the Shunamite's son awakened because they were aroused. Jesus had his sleep. His resurrection worked from within outward. He said, "I have power to lay down my life and I have power to take it up again." We do not wonder the disciples were glad when they saw the Lord. He could not be holden by the bands of death. It is the gladness of possession. Christ had come back. He was now theirs. I have seen a mother when her boy came back home safe. There was a thousand things she might have said. Just one thing she did, that was, look; one thing she said, "My boy," as that's the gladness of possession. Thomas could only say "My Lord and my God." The ministry of that man had gone before. Now it was theirs to sacrifice their lives to multiply the joy of others. No widow's sob or orphan's cry were heard in vain. Charity takes on a new hue when touched with the resurrection life. We should not have known anything about the cherry tree incident unless Washington had come to be our President. Nobody would particularly care to-day how many cloisters floors Martin Luther swept in his monastic zeal, but that he was the man who afterwards stood for religious liberty. So I reverently say, we should not have the story of Cana or Capernaum except for a risen Christ.

The lessons that pledges victory, that touch, gives men new ideas, starts life in new grooves. He is to hate old sins, love new loves. The captain fallen; not dead. He lives. If you want to know what made Peter the man that faced the howling mob, that gave Stephen a shining face when they were pelting him with stones, it was that they saw the risen Christ. We immortalize men who give themselves in full abandon to a "lost

ANDOVER YOUNG MAN PRAISED

JAMESTOWN PRESS SPEAKS WELL OF FRANK CANNON.

A Talented Young Man Coming Rapidly To The Front In Musical Circles.

After only five months practice at the Hill's Piano School at Jamestown, Frank Cannon is winning a whole bundle of praise from the press of that city. In speaking of a recital held in that city by this school we clip the following from the Jamestown Morning Post:

"The renditions by Mr. Cannon, who assisted were remarkably fine, the audience vociferously applauding his performances, and forcing him to respond to an encore. His number 'Why?' by Schumann, which was next to the last on the programme, was rendered with a great deal of style and delicacy. In pleasing contrast to the above number he gave Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 18, by Listz with a dash and brilliancy that pleased the audience, and raised them to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. As an encore he played 'Soaring' by Robert Schuman. Mr. Cannon is a young man who is in this city devoting his whole time to music. His home is in Andover, N. Y."

"Special mention should be given to Mr. Cannon, the only gentleman on the programme, who gave a very intelligent and broad rendering of Beethoven's 'Andante in F' and Schumann's 'Aufshwung.'"

The Evening Journal of the same place, in speaking of the recital says of Mr. Cannon:

"Frank Cannon, one of the advanced students of the school assisted by rendering four numbers and responded to an encore. His rendition of Schuman's 'Why' was marked with rare delicacy and feeling. 'The production is a sort of reverie in which the composer seems to be questioning his fate and the young pianist interpreted it graphically. His performance of the Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 18, by Lists was a bold and dashing piece of work which won the tribute of a recall, altho it was the last number on a long program. In response he played Soaring, by Schuman, and eclipsed even his splendid rendering of the production on Thursday evening. Mr. Cannon is studying music with a view of making it his life work and his playing on Friday evening convinced those who heard him that success lies ahead of him."
