Two Gifted Breeds of Horses Found Only in the Renks Lake Region."

said Maj. Gardner, pointing to an orinary, everyday looking bay horse hat a man was driving toward the airchild house, you wouldn't think he had any points out of the usual run of horses, but if you happened to be driving him and should come to a hill n the road, especially a steep hill. that horse would undoubtedly surprise you. He is one of a breed of horses that is known nowhere except | along Keuka lake. owner found a colt at her side one morning, and a nice and lively one it was. The colt grew to be a horse that its owner was proud of, but the first time he drove him after breaking him to harness he noticed an extraordinary thing about him. The first hill he came to, which was a very steep one, the horse stuck his fore feet out and just slid to the bottom like a streak, and then went on like any ordinary horse. He repeated this at every hill. It was simply a hereditary slide, a prenatal impression from his mother's remarkable performance on Bluff Point. That slide was just the thing for the short, almost perpendicular hills that are a peculiar feature of the roads that run along Keuka lake. Teamsters dreaded to go down those hills with loads, for few horses were sure footed enough to do it safely. The slide that this horse developed made the descent not only safe, but quick, if it could be reproduced in a strain of stock. was, and the slider stock of horses had the call every time along Keuka lake for years, and advanced the interest of the region almost as much as a double track railroad.

"But an event happened a few years ago that ruined the strain. Bricout, the champagne man, up here in Hammondsport Glen, had an old one eyed mare that wasn't used much except for breeding purposes. She had the run of the Bricout place, and one day wandered to the top of one side of the ed in the neighborhood of some small to be the witness of tears, if any other Connerton's residence, on A street, on ence. She a colt after a time, and from the way he looked folks thought he would be a credit to the slider stock, for his dam and his sire were way back sliders from the old hoss. But the first time he was driven he disappointed the community. When he came to his first hill—and it was a dandy instead of doing a slick and thoroughbred slide, he simply tumbled over in the road and went rolling down the hill like a log on a rollway. Rolling horses were worse than useless, o course, and in spite of everything the slider stock got corrupted with the roller, and today you can't find thoroughred slider, except now and then an old one like the bay yonder. The stock is played out. But 200 feet. down the face of a glen! \ That was a wonderful roll for a one eyed mare, even if it did break up a good strain of blood, wasn't it?"
