Snow Fence Harm

J. K. writes: "A snow fence has been run up near my strawberry bed. Will the extra snow injure the plants?"

Professor J. Oskamp of the pomology department answers: "As a rule, I think, the additional snow cover would help to prevent damage from spring frosts by holding back the growth of the plants. The added snow, also, will add to the soil moisture which should be beneficial.

"If you covered the plants before you had any real cold weather, they should be safe until spring. Temperatures around 20 to 22 degrees Fahrenheit will kill strawberry plants. This explains why much winter killing takes place in beds apparently well-covered, because the plants were injured before the mulch was put on."

Straightening Silos

R. T. B. asks: "How can silos of the usual wood-stave and hoop construction be straightened when they come out of plumb?"

The answer from the U. S. department of agriculture at Washington: "It is very hard to straighten a silo after it is racked. With a plain silo bound with iron hoops, two wheels or braced hoops should be made to fit inside the silo, one at the bottom and one at the top. This prevents a collapse of the silo when it is straightened.

"To plumb this type of silo, pull the top with a block and tackle or brace the leaning side with props. After the structure is erect all hoops should be tightened. Make sure that the staves are properly located.

"Stave silos that have splines or tongued or grooved, or shiplapped joints can be straightened only with much effort if at all, because of the friction in the splines and lock ed joints.

"You may be lucky to straighten your wood-hoop silo with the interior bracing as suggested; but hope for success is not too encouraging unless conditions are very favorable and great care is used to plumb the structure gradually. In many instances it is considered advisable to take down the silo carefully and to rebuilt it. This gives a tighter structure and lessens the damage to the staves and other parts."

There are more than 70 insurance companies doing business in California.

One-fourth of the land area of the United States is in forests.

Australia cites increased sales of electric current as one of the results of improved conditions.

Workmen repairing a railroad dock at Detroit have found the unfinished tunnel to Canada, which was started and abandoned 50 years ago. The opening to the tunnel, 25 feet in diameter and walled with brick, is under two feet of water.

Ranchers in northern Australia are using airplanes with huge eyes painted under the wings to frighten away tribesmen who spear cattle in preference to native game. Recently air force machines, which have a bull's eye marker, toured the cattle country and the blacks, thinking these were eyes watching them, discontinued their cattle thefts.

Brakes New Feature On New Ford V-8

Brakes of an entirely new design, requiring less pedal pressure while at the same time providing more effective braking control, are an important feature of the new Ford V-8 for 1935, according to Guy S. Wood, local Ford dealer.

"The brakes are more powerful, and the action is quick, positive and uniform on all four wheels, without jerking or swerving, and the required pedal pressure is so light that it is practically effortless," he said.

"In designing the new brakes, Ford engineers have retained the time-tested mechanical type — the type used on a majority of today's large and expensive cars—but this mechanism has been greatly simplified.

"The brakes are of the self-centering type, with a new floating wedge which aids in equalizing the pressure applied to each of the two brake shoes in each wheel. Shoe linings have been shortened and their width has been increased 16 per cent., making full utilization of the brake lining and providing greater braking effectiveness. The brakes are 30 to 40 per cent more efficient than formerly. Two additional ribs on the cast alloy steel drums give a 40 per cent increase in cooling areas and guard against abnormal drum expansion due to heat generated by excessive braking.

"The new brakes have fewer operating parts than formerly and are easier to adjust, a single foot-pedal adjustment making equalization of each brake positive and easy."
