Clear up your complexion with

MILK

If you are humiliated by unsightly skin blemishes, try this easy, pleasant way to clear your skin. Just a glass of milk at least one meal a day. Cool, fresh, delicious milk. It sounds almost too easy and too inexpensive to work, doesn't it? Here's why it does: Milk is the richest source of calcium of all food. And calcium is one of the first things expensive skin specialists prescribe to clear up unsightly blemishes. You get a calcium beauty treatment with each glass of milk you drink.

Another thing: the more milk you use the more you save.

Milk is today's outstanding example of an economy food!

CELEBRATE THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Satterlee, Formerly Owner of Alfred Sun, Now of California, Married 50 Years.

From a Monrovia, Calif., newspaper we learn of the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Satterlee of that city. They were married a half century ago at Alfred, N. Y. It was during Commencement week at Alfred that the couple decided to start life's voyage together, both being students at the university. So on June 23, 1887, at the home of the bride's father, Rev. L. E. Livermore, a Seventh Day Baptist clergyman, and business and financial agent for Alfred University, the wedding vows were exchanged.

Today the couple recall that only a few of their old friends who attended their wedding are living, among them being Dr. E. H. Lewis of Palo Alto, retired dean of Lewis Institute of Chicago and professor of Chicago University, and Mrs. Flora Jacobs of Dansville, N. Y., now 92, who is Mrs. Satterlee's aunt.

Four children were born to the Satterlee union, the eldest a daughter, Leanne Hazeltine of South Pasadena; L. G. Satterlee of Eagle Rock; William L. Satterlee of Los Angeles and L. Fred Satterlee of Oakland, Calif. Mrs. Hazeltine has a responsible position with the juvenile court of Los Angeles being in charge of delinquent girls. The three sons are engaged in business, Fred and William with the Southern Pacific railroad and L. G. Satterlee in Eagle Rock. The couple also have three grandchildren, Donald Alfred, Geraldine and Jackie, offsprings of the L. G. Satterlees. All will be present for the party tonight.

The Satterlees moved to Monrovia in 1904 and have since occupied their present residence. For many years Mr. Satterlee was identified with the Pasadena, Troy and Monrovia laundries and now manages his own business.

HENRY FORD MUST BE CREDITED WITH BEING RESPONSIBLE FOR MANY CHANGES IN WORKING CONDITIONS IN 40 YEARS

Dearborn, Mich.—With the whole country wondering as to the attitude of the Ford Motor Company in the national labor situation, the Ford Almanac, out Thursday, in a lead article entitled "The Financiers' Way—and Ford's" said:

"Wherever in America an industrial worker strives to better his condition, he joins the fight for industrial justice which Henry Ford has been leading for more than 30 years—on the one hand, to pay the worker more than a 'living wage,' that he and his children may have the benefit of some of the luxuries and opportunities of life; and, on the other, to keep the price of those luxuries and opportunities within reach of the workers' dollar.

"The younger workers of today know little—and appreciate less—the condition of the American working man 40 years ago. In those days the financiers ruled. Labor, to them, was just another commodity to be bought at the lowest possible price. Work shifts were 10 and 12 hours a day—everywhere common labor got from 90 cents to $1 a day. Highly skilled labor got from $1.50 to $2 a day. Men who, by special ability, or unusual circumstance, got $3 a day were looked upon by their fellows as the top-notchers of the industrial world.

"The basic aim of management then was to produce as cheaply as possible and sell for the highest price possible. That was the financier's way. That system affected the conditions under which men had to labor. Tools and machinery were kept in use until they utterly broke down. Millions of men worked, not on an hourly basis but on 'piece-work'—another device of the financiers to sweat every nickel possible out of the men.

"When the tools got old and worn out the earning power of the men was cut down. When the machinery broke down—as it often did—the men lost time and wages.

"Decent, up-to-date machinery conditions for industrial workers were unknown; the lavatories the workers had to use were little better than pig-stys. If a man was injured at his work, that was his grief; hospital care, in plants, for the most part, did not exist. Time off with pay for hospital care was unknown. Cleanliness in the plant was unknown; modern lighting and ventilation were unknown; lockers for the workers' street clothes; special protective clothing and safety devices for men working in dangerous jobs and many other features that make Ford plants today the safest and most sanitary in the world were all unknown 40 years ago.

"Henry Ford worked long years as a day laborer under those same conditions. That experience burned into his soul the hatred of industrial injustice that has characterized his every action since he became an employer.

"When, at 17, he first came to Detroit, he had to have two jobs to make ends meet. At his day job at an engine works he worked ten hours a day and got $2.50 a week. At his night job, repairing watches for a jeweler, he worked four hours a night and got $2.00 a week; $4.50 a week for 14 hours labor each day, six days a week! Thus, Henry Ford, from his own experience, knows, feels and understands the viewpoint of the worker. His whole after life proves it.

"Most workers who become bosses soon lose the viewpoint of the men. Ford didn't. With time he became superintendent of the main engine-room of the Detroit Edison Co. Here, and at the sub-stations of the company, the men worked 12-hour shifts. Ford soon began pointing out to the management that, if the work-day were divided into three eight-hour shifts, the men would have leisure to improve themselves, would work better and improve the service. He also urged that, if the company expected to keep its employees, it must pay wages sufficient to permit the men to marry and raise families. With time he won both points.

"Ford's old boss—the man Ford used to work for—is still living in Detroit. He is Alex Dow, today the president of the Detroit Edison Co. Not long ago, in speaking of the old days, he said: 'I will remember Henry Ford for two reasons: First, for the clearness and practical good sense of his ideas, and second, his constant interest in doing something to make shop conditions better. In those days we had a hard time getting men and keeping them. The electrical business was new. Men skilled in it were scarce. We had to take a good many raw men and train them; then, after they had their training, many left us to go elsewhere.

"'Ford's idea was that we ought to hire men with the thought of keeping them with us for years. Of course, Ford had nothing to do with policy—he himself was only on the payroll—but he had ideas; and one of them was that you couldn't keep good men unless you paid them enough so that they could marry and raise families and have leisure to spend with their families, and enjoy life generally. I appreciated this—it was right along my line of thought.

"'I remember Ford always urged this point strongly—that, in fixing the amount of wages to be paid, we should consider the cost of living, to make sure that the wages were high enough to buy all the things a growing family needs.'

"That's what Ford's old boss says was on Ford's mind when Ford was a hired working man.

"After 23 years of working for someone else, Ford got going as a manufacturer. He immediately put into effect some of the ideas and hopes he had acquired in relation to labor.

"It is difficult for people today to realize how revolutionary were Ford's moves. At a time when American industry generally believed it sound business practice to employ as few men as possible, work them as hard and as long hours as possible, and pay them as little as possible, Ford launched, on a huge scale, a policy of employing as many men as possible, on a basis of a shorter day and shorter week, lightening their toil as much as possible and yet paying them higher and higher wages.

"Ford's Highland Park plant became the wonder of the industrial world. It was not only cleaner, better lighted and ventilated, with modern sanitary facilities for its thousands of workers, but, by installing huge conveyor systems, moving assembly lines and other new devices Ford had taken the load off the back of the men.

"Then, too, he used every ounce of his ingenuity to lower the cost of his car to the buyer. He made it possible for the worker and his family—as well as the rich—to have a car.

"And, to make doubly sure that at least Ford employees could have a car and a home and the other benefits of life, Ford did a thing even more astounding to the world of those days. He put into effect a $5-a-day minimum wage for all workers. The effect of this, thru the years, has been to force wages up in all labor industries.

"Ford's minimum wage today is $6 a day for an eight-hour shift.

"Ford's high wage is the one and only thing that keeps wages up all over the country!

"If Ford should lower wages—or should any law or agreement restrict his freedom to raise wages—wages would go down all over the country.

"With Ford paying $6 a day, the financiers also are forced to pay high wages in their plants, to attract labor. They want that stopped! — That's why they are again trying right now to force Ford to do business their way.

"That is the true meaning of this drive to force Ford to accept an outside party as a wage dictator for Ford employees, when, for many years, Ford voluntarily has paid his employees the highest industrial wages in the world.

"Heretofore Ford has always paid the highest wages his industry could afford. Once—and during the depression to—he had it up to $7 a day minimum. Only years of terrific business slump forced it down. Now he has got it up to $6 a day again. He was the first employer in the country to restore the minimum wage after the depression.

"The next step in the game of the financiers will be wage standardization. All plants of the same kind will pay the same wages. The skilled worker will have lost the benefit of his skill—because he will then have no market where he can sell it for a price higher than that named by the wage dictator.

"And should you sign away your rights, you will find out, a little later on, when all industries are under one control, that Ford cannot raise wages in his own plant—as he has done so many times before. He would not be allowed to. If he did, it would cause trouble in the other plants controlled by the financier's wage dictator. There's something to think about!"
