SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

THE TRANSFIGURED CHRIST MEETS HUMAN NEED

International Sunday School Lesson For March 29, 1942.

Golden Text: "And they were all astonished at the majesty of God." —Luke 9:43.

(Lesson Text: Luke 9:28-43a.)

The ninth chapter of Luke begins with an account of a mission of the 12 disciples, sent out by Jesus with power to cast out demons and cure diseases, to preach the Kingdom of God and certain instructions as to their own conduct.

Herod was perplexed when he heard of the activities of Jesus, the new teacher, especially when some said he was John the Baptist risen from the dead when this same Herod had beheaded him. At Bethsaida occurred the miraculous feeding of the five thousand from the scanty supply furnished by five loaves of bread and two fishes, the only miracle performed by Jesus which is recorded by all four gospel writers, illustrating the faith which Jesus had in the power entrusted to him.

Luke's account of Peter's "Great Confession" is briefer than the similar record of Matthew and Mark. Immediately thereafter Luke records for the first time the prophecy of Jesus of his suffering and death, followed by the paradoxical statement that the loss of life for his sake would be to save it.

A few days after this, Jesus took with him Peter, James and John up into a nearby mountain to pray and while they were alone together on the mountaintop, they had a marvelous experience. As Jesus prayed "the fashion of his countenance was altered (Matthew says, his face did shine as the brightness of the sun) and his raiment became white and dazzling.

"And behold, Moses and Elijah appeared." "Moses had received the law and given it to the people. Elijah had called the people back to the law," says G. Campbell Morgan. "They were the two most remarkable figures in the whole of the Mosaic economy. Moses' presence signified that, in Jesus, the shadows of the law were all fulfilled and now withdrawn. Elijah stood now upon the Mount to acknowledge that, in this Transfigured One, all the hope of heaven begins and ends, and that, in him, every prophecy of the past is fulfilled."

"Whether the Transfiguration was a wholly objective reality, or a wholly subjective experience, or a combination of both, its significance is the same," says W. P. Beham. "The vision came to convince the disciples of the truth of Jesus' announcement, and to hearten them in the face of it. Among other things, it taught them: (1) Messiahship and martyrdom are the divine plan; (2) the character of the Messianic Kingdom is above all things spiritual; (3) Jesus is indeed the Messiah; they had not been mistaken; (4) Judaism is not overthrown, but glorified in Jesus; (5) I owe submission to but one, and that one is Jesus: 'Hear ye him'."

Three times during the ministry of Jesus the heavenly voice testified as to him. The first was at the time of his baptism, in the beginning of his ministry. The last time was in Jerusalem, just before his final rejection and crucifixion. The other occasion was at the time of the Transfiguration, recorded in our lesson text.

"I take the Transfiguration to be a great lesson in prayer and I urge that more and more it should enter into our life. It is difficult. It will not be accomplished without a strenuous effort to shake ourselves free of the clinging material things, but it is worth far more than all the effort we can make." says Charles Brown. "We are living as if this world were all, and often as if there were no God, and I believe that the constant habit of prayer would alter that. It would introduce us to the larger life. It would not change our circumstances, but it might change our spirit. It would lead us to look beyond our circumstances, which do change, to the great and abiding facts of life, thru the mists to the everlasting hills."

Peter was so inspired by the experience that he exclaimed, "Master, it is good for us to be here. Let us make three tabernacles." In other words, let us stay here on this mountaintop, preserving all the richness of the experience for ourselves. He was ready to let the world look after itself as long as they were having a good time.

However, after worship comes work, and worship cannot long stay sincere and genuine and helpful if it is made an end in itself and does not lead on to doing and serving. "It is the temptation that assails every soul that rises to a high place. It is peculiar to mountaintop experiences. Privilege turned to selfishness." J. N. Britton.

YOUR CAR How to Get the MOST out of It

Sales of new cars to the average citizen have been stopped. New tires cannot be purchased. Even retreads are being rationed.

In view of these wartime conditions, this newspaper today is starting, on an inside page, an interesting and timely series of articles entitled "YOUR CAR—How to Get the MOST out of It."

This series, based on material prepared by General Motors Customer Research staff in co-operation with General Motors engineers, Proving Ground experts, research technicians and service specialists, should prove helpful to every motorist in the crucial days ahead.
