AN INTERESTING LETTER. Written from Andover—Strong Testimonial for Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

ANDOVER, N. Y., May 3, 1891.

Dr. KILMER: Dear Sir: I thought I would write you a few lines and tell you how much we think of your remedies. About three years ago my husband commenced to fail very rapidly with kidney trouble. He lost his appetite and became so weak that the least exertion would cause him to lie down. He could scarcely walk. He doctored with all the local physicians here, but without getting any relief. He gave up and said that he could not live three months. One day we received one of your "Guides to Health" through the mail, and I persuaded him to get a bottle of your Swamp Root and try it. Before he had taken the whole of the first bottle we could see a change for the better. He kept up the treatment for some time, until he was able to do considerable work, and to-day he is so much improved that it is not necessary for him to take the medicine all the time, and he can walk a mile and a half to the village and back. We have also tried your Indian Cough Cure, and never found anything that could beat it. I noticed in our "Guide to Health" that you would send six beautiful cards and a picture of yourself. We would be very glad to get your picture, as we are certain he would have been in his grave, if it had not been for your Swamp Root. We recommend your medicines every chance we get. Mrs. D. B. LEE, Andover, N. Y.

[The preceding testimonial was set up in this office from the original letter written by Mrs. Lee.—Ed. News.]

The Erie Enterprise. The Erie Railway's new book for 1891, "Summer Excursion Routes and Resorts," proves very interesting, containing a complete description of all popular summer resorts. It is a larger and more elaborate work than has ever been gotten out and does credit to the Erie management. By addressing A. W. Bodley, Division Passenger Agent, Buffalo, N. Y., enclosing a two-cent stamp, one can be received by return mail.

When a Person Faints. A young woman fainted away in the Tombs police court, and the policemen, to revive her, poured a bucketful of water, more or less, upon her face. This was well meant and it was effective, but it was also cruel and unnecessary. The only really necessary thing to do for a fainting person is to place him or her flat upon the back, with the head on a level with the rest of the body or a little lower. The fainting is caused by the recession of blood from the brain, and this position, by facilitating its return, restores consciousness. Unless the clothing is unduly close about the neck or waist there is no need of loosening it. Cold water dashed in the face restores consciousness by suddenly shocking the system. But it is an exceedingly unpleasant performance for the person who faints and it isn't half so speedy, which is a consideration when a lot of men suddenly find among them a fainting young woman to be cared for.—New York Evening Sun.

WESTERN SHERIFF'S COURAGE.

Locking Himself in a Corridor with Five Prisoners to Subdue Them. "I think that the bravest man I ever knew," said the colonel, "was one of the worst. His name was Kit Castle, and for some years, so long ago that my hair grows grayer when I think of it, he was sheriff of Uintah county, Wy. T. Kit had his own peculiar code of morals, like a good many other western men of that day.

"He borrowed money in the most reckless fashion, but he always paid it back to the last cent. He never broke a promise. But he would cheat at cards at every opportunity. He couldn't help it. Every one knew that he cheated, but no man was ever bold enough to say so in his face, for Castle was not afraid of anything that walked or crawled, and he was a dead shot every time his big finger pressed a trigger. He was over six feet in height, a lion in strength and a tiger when enraged.

"He started out alone on horseback once when he was sheriff to capture two horse thieves. He was gone for a week, and people began to think that Kit had got the worst of a hard fight, when he rode into town one evening.

"Where are your men, Kit?" some one asked with a laugh, thinking they had slipped him.

"The sheriff pulled from his belt three revolvers and laid them down. Then he went out to his horse and unfastening two pairs of spurs from the saddle came back and threw them jingling and ringing on the counter.

"One of them revolvers is mine," said Kit slowly. "All the rest is souvenirs"—"soo-veners" he pronounced it. "I had sixty miles to ride back, and I hadn't the time to lead two horses with the corpses of two horse thieves tied on their backs." This was all he ever said about the fight.

"Perhaps a more villainous set of scoundrels was never collected than the prisoners whom Castle always had in the county jail. The jail was of stone and was at the rear of the court house. Inside the place was lined with sheet iron and along the end ran the heavily barred cells. One evening the sheriff went into the jail to see if his prisoners were all right for the night. One of them had gotten out of his cell and had then released four other desperadoes. When Kit opened the door into the jail the men started for him with a rush. Kit had time to spring through the door and close it, and his prisoners would have been as secure in the iron walled corridor as in their cells. But the sight of the five men maddened him and he threw the door shut with a loud clang, locking himself in the room with the others.

"Drawing his revolver he leaped at the men, bellowing in his anger. He was too enraged to shoot them. He wanted to punish them for daring to attack him. His strength and energy were tremendous, and he hurled the five men into one of the iron corners. Pushing them and knocking them about, he beat them over the head and shoulders and arms with the butt of his revolver until they screamed at the top of their voices in their helpless agony. Then, his teeth shut close together in his great jaw, he picked them up one by one and pitched them into their cells, securely fastening the bolts.

"Such daring and recklessness as his could belong only to a man who did not know the name of physical fear. He was a born fighter, and as a soldier in a battle would have been remorselessly fierce."—New York Tribune.

A Trifle Too Cool. "Doctor, just an instant, please," exclaimed a caller at the office of a man of physic, as he caught sight of the physician disappearing into his private office.

"I'll see you shortly, sir," was the curt reply.

"But a second is all I want," persisted the caller.

"I'll see you directly, sir," with sternness.

The visitor took a seat in the general reception room, read the afternoon paper, looked at the pictures and played with the dog. After thirty minutes or more had passed the medicine man came out of his den and, with an air of condescension, said to the visitor:

"Well, now, sir, I am at your service.—Your turn has come. What can I do for you?"

"Oh, nothing in particular," was the reply. "I just dropped in to tell you that just before I called I saw a couple of men clearing your garden of those flowers you had put in yesterday; that's all."—London Tit-Bits.
