Louisa's Letter

My father died several weeks ago and my two sisters and I have been urging mother to sell the old home and come and live with us. It is not a matter of money, as mother as an income sufficient to live on, if she continues to live in the old house. She is usually so reasonable, and she could spend a third of her time with each of us. We would not be worried about her staying alone if we knew she was always with one of us. But she seems determined to stay where she is and has asked an un-married cousin of ours, to live with her.

Don't you think she would be happier with us than with a distant cousin in a big lonely house?

DAUGHTER.

Arkansas.

Answer:

I think your mother is a very wise woman. She will be happier in her own home where she has been mistress for so many years, than she would anywhere else. She will be free to go and come as she pleases, have whomsoever she chooses to visit her, and do as she pleases. She can get up at any hour without disturbing the in-laws and she will not be forever staying home with Johnny or Susie when their parent wish to go gallivanting..

There would be much more worrying about it, if your mother sold her home and moved in with her three daughters. After a while it would make you unhappy to see how much she missed her familiar surroundings. It is good that she has someone to live with her and I am sure you need not worry about her being lonely. If she lives in the same town, you can go to see her every day and if she is not so near you can write to her often and have her visit you a lot.

LOUISA.

Dear Louisa:

I have a husband who despises slacks. We are planning to go to the beach and all the women will be wearing slacks. I hate to be odd, running around in dresses.

What must I do?

M. E. V.

New Jersey.

Answer:

Slacks are for the slim, and should never be worn by women who are slightly more than pleasing by plump. Perhaps that is your husband's objection to them. Why not buy culottes. They are much easier on the eyes of bystanders than slacks, when the wearer bulges in the wrong places.

LOUISA.

Inflation is to be avoided, regardless of the regulations necessary to control prices.

What You Buy With WAR BONDS

It's not a pleasant picture to contemplate, but War calls for "blood and sweat and tears." And the Army Medical Corps, with its efficient nurses and its volunteer Red Cross "Angels of Mercy," needs thousands of surgical beds for field and base hospitals on every front.

These beds cost approximately $22 each. They are the latest thing in modern hospital beds, with elevating springs. In some instances surgical cots are used in temporary field hospitals and there is a folding bed which may be used in ambulances. Your purchase of War Bonds and Stamps can buy many of these beds for the Army. You'll sleep better if you know our boys have every hospital comfort. Buy War Bonds every pay day. Invest ten percent of your income.

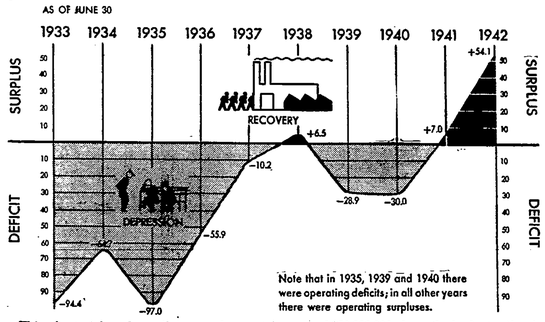
TEN YEARS OF NEW YORK STATE FINANCES
(ACCUMULATED DEFICIT AND SURPLUS, 1933-42, IN MILLIONS OF DOLLARS)



Note that in 1935, 1939 and 1940 there were operating deficits; in all other years there were operating surpluses.

This chart, taken from the annual report for the fiscal year 1942 of Joseph V. O'Leary, Comptroller of New York State, shows how a deficit of $94,400,000 at the end of the fiscal year 1933 was converted into a surplus of $54,100,000 on June 30, 1942. An important factor in the surplus was the excess in revenues of $30,000,000 above the budget estimate last year. This year, for the first time, the New York State Comptroller has issued a streamlined summary report, illustrated with pictorial charts and photographs, to enable the average citizen to get a clear understanding of the intricate details of the State's financial picture.

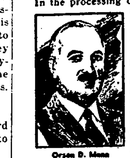
Science In The News
By ORSON D. MUNN, U.H.B., LL.B., Sc.D.
Editor, Scientific American

Soap stands for cleanliness, sanitation, health, and civilized living; it is indispensable to human comfort. But soap has other values which become especially apparent in wartime, values which send carload lots of soap to many of our war production plants.

Some of the new artificial rubber factories use enough soap to supply the homes of a small city. In the processing of both artificial and reclaimed rubber, common soap is employed variously as a dispersing, lubricating, stabilizing, and wetting agent. In synthetic rubbers of the butadiene type the ingredients are emulsified in soapy water. In a widely used method for the utilization of reclaimed rubber, scrap rubber is ground up and mixed with ten per cent of soap. Then water is added gradually while the mixture is being cooked and stirred to make a latex which is almost, if not quite, equal to the original.



Orson D. Munn

At present, however, the largest industrial consumer of soap is the textile industry, where soap finds application in almost every process of converting raw materials into finished fabrics—in scouring raw wool, in felting, in bleaching and cleaning rayon and cotton goods, in dyeing, as a softening or filling agent, and in shower-proofing. Raw wool, cotton, and silk may contain as much as twenty to fifty per cent of dirt, which must be removed by repeated soap baths. More washings with soap and water are required as the woven fabric goes through printing processes.

Soap baths also enter into metal manufacturing routines. Steel ball bearings are thoroughly scrubbed in rotating drums, metal parts to be plated are first cleansed in a simple soap bath, and so on.

As a lubricant to reduce friction and heat in wire drawing, tube drawing, and metal rolling under terrific pressure, it has been found that simple soap solutions stand up better than oils and greases, a characteristic which has become more useful under the stress of today's hurry-up methods.

The flotation method of concentrating ores, which permits economical working of sources of essential minerals formerly considered useless, is calling for increasing amounts of soap. Soap has been successfully used in the flotation of scheelite (tungsten-bearing ore), hematite (iron ore), cinnabar (mercury ore), apatite (natural phosphate of lime), and others.

Because soap will penetrate many materials and carry other substances with it, it is a standard ingredient of compositions used to impart suppleness and finish to leather products. Leather dressings, leather cleansers, shoe polishes, etc., usually contain large proportions of soap. Leathers for a great variety of military uses are now treated with colloidal graphite, carried in a soap suspension, to increase their resistance to heat and moisture.

Since soap lowers surface tension soapy water will cover a considerably greater area than an equal amount of pure water. This property of soap makes it an essential ingredient of insecticide sprays, more important now than ever on farms and victory gardens. Thousands of tons of soap are thus used in conjunction with mineral and vegetable poisons, to spread the liquid over more area. Here soap does double duty because it also blocks the breathing tubes of the insect victims.

The uses described here by no means exhaust the long list of industrial processes where soap is used for other cleansing purposes, but they serve to indicate the importance of this well-known material in little-known fields.

HOW, WHAT AND WHY?
Special to the Andover News

The Andover News has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope and mention the name of this paper you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one postcard. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

How to Clarify Fat

Fats that have been rendered in the home, or fats used for deep fat frying, or fats saved from meat stocks, soups, or stews can be clarified, that is, freed from objectionable odors, tastes, or colors.

A common method is to cook slices of potato in the fat, using one medium-sized potato cut in quarter-inch slices to each pound or pint of fat. Put the slices of potato into cooled fat. Heat the fat gradually until the slices of potato are well browned and the fat ceases to bubble.

Strain the fat through a fine mesh cloth placed over a strainer; when cool, cover the fat and keep it in a dark, cool place. The potato absorbs flavors and collects some sediment, and the remainder settles to the bottom of the kettle.

Another way to clarify fat, according to the New York State College of Home Economics, is: Melt the fat with an equal volume of water and boil it for a few minutes at a moderate temperature. Stir it occasionally. Strain it through a fine mesh cloth placed over a strainer. When the fat is cool and hardens remove the solid layer of fat, and scrape off any bits of meat and other materials that may adhere to the underside.

Save and use waste kitchen fats!

No Tin Pails for Canning

Mrs. B. C. asks: "Can tin pails, such as corn sirup comes in from the store, be used for canning vegetables?

The New York State College of Home Economics replies: "We do not recommend the use of tin pails for canning fruits and vegetables because it is impossible to get an air-tight seal with them. The sirups that are originally put up in these can keep because of a high sugar concentration."

Milkweed Products

S. G. inquires: "Can milkweed be cultivated on a commercial basis?"

Prof. W. C. Muenscher of the Botany Department answers: "Experimental work is being done to determine the use of milkweed in the production of fiber and rubber, but the project has not advanced far enough for us to encourage anyone to undertake the growing of milkweed as a crop."

How to Grow Easter Lilies

Mrs. J. A. writes: "How should Easter lilies be treated if planted out of doors?"

Prof. R. C. Allen of the Floriculture Department replies: "Easter lilies are not difficult to grow out of doors although some varieties are not hardy enough to stand our northern conditions. They should be planted in well drained and well prepared soil. They do best in full sun or semi-shade. During the winter they should be mulched with leaves, straw and similar materials as a means of protection.

"No, mum," replied the conductor, "them's my ribs."
