HOW, WHAT AND WHY?

Special to the Andover News

The Andover News has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope and mention the name of this paper you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one postcard. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

Bat Control

C. P. asks: "What can I do to rid my attic of bats?"

Prof. W. J. Hamilton, Jr. answers: "Bats are useful creatures, ridding the air of noxious insects, and control methods should be instigated only when they become objectionable.

If bats do become objectionable, the surest way to eradicate them is to close all places of entrance or exit of the eves, attics or other roosting places. This may be done by nailing up shingles over the various openings leaving but one outlet. This can be closed half an hour after dark when most or all of the bats will have started after their quest for food.

Napthalene is objectionable to bats, and a dozen large handfuls of the flakes spread about the bat retreat will often repel them. A hundred of more moth balls will have the same effect. Repeat the process ten days later if any bats persist in remaining on the premises.

Lacquer Removal

Mrs. E. D. K. inquires: "How can I remove the lacquer from my new cooking utensils?"

Prof. E. Cushman replies: "Pour enough boiling water into a dish-pan or other container to cover the utensil completely, and add some soap. Soak the utensil in this solution for 15 minutes. If the utensil is too large to be completely covered, shift it frequently so that all parts are well soaked. Rub the utensil vigorously with a cloth dipped in hot water until the lacquer peels. Dip the cloth frequently if necessary. Dry and polish the utensil with any cleaning powder to restore the original lustre.

FRUIT, FLOWERS AND GARDEN

Treatment of Perennials

Now is the time to divide the clumps of many perennials that are through blooming, particularly Japanese and Siberian iris, daylilies, primroses and delphiniums. Peonies are usually divided in early September. Cut or tear apart the clumps taking care to save the roots. Each division should have one or more growing points or "eyes." Much of the tall growth of phlox and depphiniums may be cut back to balance the root injury. Primroses and plants forming basal rosettes need no pruning.

When re-planted, plants need careful watering until they become established. Growth in the late summer and fall from the crowns that will produce next year's bloom.

Seedlings which have been started for next year blooming must have careful watering. With many varieties some shade is also an advantage.

Unless the plants were started very early keep them over the winter in a cold frame or in some other form of protection.

There is still time before freezing weather to sow seed of pansies, English daisies and forget-me-nots.

Louisa's Letter

O., from Texas, wishes to know if it is all right to talk with soldiers before being introduced. I think that if she happens to be at a town entertainment or dance given for the boys in service, an introduction is not necessary. I would even go so far as to say that if a boy happened to sit near you in some public place and start a conversation in a reserved and polite manner, there would be no harm in talking to him as he would probably be just a lonely boy away from home.

But if he shouted at me on the street, or sounded disrespectfully, I most certainly would let him alone. If you picked him up, he would probably get a wrong idea of the kind of girl you are.

LOUISA.

W. D. of Alabama, who is a high school boy of 18, says that the mother of the girl he is going with refuses to let her have any dates. They have been slipping off, but do not like this kind of thing. They are considering getting married because that is the only way they can see each other. He asks for advice.

This girl's mother is making the mistake that so many parents make. Instead of giving her daughter a certain amount of freedom and welcoming her friends to the home, she is being too strict. This sometimes causes the very thing that parents wish to avoid. The girls and boys go to the other extreme and do very foolish things. Of course, it would be a tragedy if this 18-year-old boy and 16-year-old girl would run off and get married.

By next year this time, their taste in companions might be entirely different from what it is now. They might find that what they thought was real love was only a passing infatuation, and there they would be—tied down to a home and responsibilities when they would prefer being out with the crowd having a good time. They would be paying a high price for the privilege of being together.

Be patient, W. D. Perhaps if you will talk to your friend's mother and assure her that her daughter is safe with you and that you will let her know where you are going, she will let her daughter have a little more freedom. If she refuses to do this, put marriage out of your mind. It doesn't take long for the years to pass, and the girl will soon be old enough to date when she pleases.
