Suppressed Russian Horrors.

That Russia is already in a state of chaos closely bordering on revolution is believed by many European papers. The only reason these facts do not come more fully to the attention of the outside world is that a British system of repression has been adopted by the government and all news relating to the mutterings and uprisings in the empire has been censored and not allowed to pass the border. The system of wholesale lying adopted by the government in sending out reports of imaginary great Russian victories over the Japanese has been powerful in its purpose of influencing its subjects. Eventually the dupes probably will learn the truth, and when they do then it will dawn on them that they have been grossly deceived throughout. When that time comes it will certainly be possible to hold them in check longer.

The truth is, declares the St. James' Gazette, London, that "Russia must be humanly speaking on the verge of a disaster in comparison with which the French revolution sinks into insignificance." It goes to which [illegible] credit: a [illegible] gies which are finding their [illegible] the London Express, the London Telegraph and the London Standard are [illegible] terror which Nihilism [illegible] past for you and [illegible] which are self [illegible] close [illegible] far beyond [illegible] the [illegible] feels [illegible] reserve [illegible] sources of [illegible] from [illegible]

There is a [illegible] [illegible] and the [illegible] [illegible] attempt [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]