The Political Campaign. Now that both parties have placed their candidates in the field, for the Presidency, we are inclined to the belief that several things that were stated in these columns months since, were evidently correct forecasts. For instance we said that neither party had a great issue, and that the campaign would resolve itself into the issue of the personality of the candidates. Party records will be for (except it be on the money question,) and the question will be what has this or that man done, and upon the personality of the men (who we are pleased to know nothing unclean can be said of) will the campaign be waged. It is plainly evident that the strife and battle ground will be in the east. New York state undoubtedly will be the storm center of the conflict, and both parties will make every effort to carry it in their favor, for the thirty eight electorial votes will be a large factor in the election of the successful man. So it will be a clean campaign, and yet, so far as New York state is concerned it will be a battle royal. The state is so arranged geographically, and the political candidates are such that politically the Empire state is in the doubtful column, and as stated above, the storm center of the campaign will be within our own borders. It will need increased majorities for the republican counties, while the democrats will probably use every effort to decrease the vote of their opponents in the cities. Thus in our humble opinion, New York will be in doubt until the votes are counted on the eighth day of November next.

One Thousand Dead. When the General Slocum went down, not long since, and the newspapers in startling headlines told of the horrible calamity, people stood agast and wondered. It is the sudden calamity that calls attention to these facts, and yet, the New York Tribune says, "The estimated annual death rate of the world is 45,000,000 or a daily total of 123,000 or one thousand in every eleven minutes." In the omniscence of God, whether we assume the position of doubter or cynic, the death roll of a disaster however great can only be a minor detail. For a few days the great calamity is remembered then forgotten, to be thought of by those only who suffer. Within the state of New York 360 die every day, strange as it may seem. Yet this mighty procession goes on to the tomb, and as the wise man wrote long years ago, "The sound of mourning is heard in the streets."

Is the Work Completed? Andover's pride is her beautiful new school building, and the stranger being shown the sights is invariably taken and shown the building. Not long since a visitor in the village passing by the building remarked, "What a pretty building, but why don't you clean up and grade around the grounds?" The hearer made some trifling answer, but it aroused the queery why? Two weeks of vacation have now gone by, and the grading should have been all done and the ground reseeded by this time, so the grass could have gotten a good start before the little feet of the school children are let loose on the grounds to tramp the young plants to their death. Very soon there is to be an annual meeting and one thing the people of the district should do is to furnish the money for and insist that the Board of Education should clean up and grade around the new building. The Board of Education is composed of men and women who have shown marked ability and who have wisely and economically expended the money of the district and they may hesitate about asking for the funds for this work, knowing the heavy expense already incurred. However, the people in annual meeting assembled should see that the funds are appropriated. A few hundred, perhaps an even hundred, would do the grading required and beautify and complete the work. Let it be done. Not only will it beautify the now seemingly uncared-for grounds, but will reflect credit upon the district in the evident fact that they have a pride in the work of their own hands, and have forever set in the background the spirit of parsimoniousness. Let the work be completed.

Think Well of Yourself. A man's opinion of himself is often the measure of how successful a life a man can live. True, indeed, there are cases where a man may think more highly of himself than he ought, and such a fellow is at once classed a bundle of conceit—a boorish, overbearing fellow whose success goes no farther than his personality reaches. After all, however, the fellow that has respect enough for himself to take care of himself, whether it be in commercial, professional or mechanical lines, is usually the one who mounts the ladder, because he thinks too much of himself to allow a mean act to weaken his own character. The well thinker will stand high because he is too broad in mind and character to even attempt to build himself up by assaulting the hard earned, carefully guarded character of another. There are numbers of narrow gaugers who in seeing the success of others at once commence throwing stones to belittle the influence and worth of the successful one. A person should think well of himself and refuse to be a narrow gauged citizen in any sphere of life. It's the well thinker, the broad-minded, cheery disposition man who is missed when he leaves his friends or community. If one thinks well of himself, others will think well of him.

The Jury. System. Tho the constitution of the United States says that every citizen shall be entitled to a trial by jury the supreme court has decided that this does not entitle the Philippines to demand jury trial until Congress shall enact a law to that effect. This is in line with its former decisions that the provisions of the constitution do not execute themselves, and are operative only after Congress has passed the necessary legislation. There are many persons who believe that things would be improved in a judicial sense by abolishing the jury system altogether. They are enabled to cite many miscarriages of justice resulting from passion and prejudice on the part of jurymen, and in some of our large cities from bribery. It is also true that sometimes a wrong result is brought about by ignorance of law and an inability to understand and apprehend the facts of the case. Still it is doubtful if the ends of justice would be promoted by dispensing with the jury and permitting all controversies civil and criminal to be determined by the court. Judges sometimes go wrong, not often willfully, but by mistake. Simply to take a lawyer and put him on the bench does not invest him with any discernment that he did not possess before. He has the assistance of a full discussion of the facts of each case by counsel for the contending parties and may take such time as he desires to deliberate upon the facts and law of the case. There is however safety in numbers and the calm deliberation of twelve honest men, with a view to ascertain the truth of any case leaves little to be desired in method at least in the way of settling disputes between neighbors. There is a chance however to improve matters and thus more nearly prevent a miscarriage of justice. The judge should be invested with more power to supervise and control the verdicts of juries. He should have power to instruct juries as to an intricate state of facts; to advise them as to their duties and to aid them in their deliberations. He should be empowered to withold from the jury all cases in which upon motion he would grant a new trial. This is the law in several states and it is said to work well. The right of appeal tho somewhat abridged is yet a safeguard that is usually sufficient to correct all mistakes.

Anarchy. The writer thinks we are in danger because this land is filled with anarchy. We do not refer to the red flag and bomb throwing kind, tho there is far too much of that. We mean that there is a principle abroad which produces anarchy, a root which must blossom into anarchy. When we see a young thistle sprawling its tender thorns upon the ground we know its certain tendency is towards a big, burly, red-faced thistle which shall present inticing camping ground for bumblebees and yellow wasps. When we see men who are restless under law, who care little for the general good of society as long as they attain their ends, we know that under favoring circumstances they will blossom out into anarchists, nihilists and bomb-throwers. A man who cares nothing for the interests of society has in him the germs of anarchy, whether he be the corporate head of some great concern or the blue skirted Pole or ignorant Italian who shovels gravel on the railroad. It is a dangerous spirit, and it is in the air. It creeps into great corporations; it permeates city councils; it animates word committees, it pervades countless secret organizations. It ought to be crushed. An odious or unjust law can be changed by a majority vote at any time. This is the redress of freeman; but while a law is on the statute books, all citizens high or low should be made to abey it. If we had no anarchy save that which appears in the reckless vagabonds who employ the knife, pistol and bomb, we could easily dispose of it; but when it gets into councils, senate chambers and gubernatorial chairs we begin to sniff a real danger and, if we are wise, we shall nip it in the bud.

Evading the Russian Censor. It has been said that there is no censorship system on earth so thorough as that of Russia. Getting smuggled goods through the New York custom house would be easy compared to pushing any forbidden intelligence past the lynx eyed spies of the czar. Yet a young Russian Jew in the army recently accomplished the feat.

A correspondent of a London paper tells how a Jewish mother in Warsaw received a letter from her son, a young surgeon who had been sent to the front. The letter bore the stamp of the censor and evidently had been submitted to the customary official investigation. It said that the writer was in good health, that the discipline of the troops was as admirable as their spirits were high and patriotic, that there was an ample supply of all necessaries and even comforts and that the sanitary conditions everywhere were so satisfactory that the doctors had practically nothing to do. One can imagine the satisfaction with which the censor stamped this delightful little note for instant transmission. The writer of it in a postscript asked his mother to send him a few of his Hebrew books to beguile his pleasant leisure hours, the censor being only too ready to further his innocent requests. The titles of the desired books, given in Hebrew, of course, were as follows: "Famine and Destitution," "Consequent Fearful Epidemics," "Scarcely Any Sanitary Appliances," "Demoralisation of the Army, Constantly Increasing," "End of Discipline," "Wish I Were Taken Prisoner." The censor was not a Hebrew scholar.

Verily there is nothing impossible to him who causes his gray matter to get busy rather than simply using it to fill the cavity in his skull.

A Fair Offer Made By L. A. Burrows to All Sufferers from Catarrh.

L. A. Burrows is selling Hyomei on a plan that has caused considerable talk amongst his customers.

The plan is different from that followed by other remedies, but the remedy itself is different also. This treatment for the cure of catarrh has such an unusual record of cures to its credit that L. A. Burrows offers to refund the money if it does not give the desired benefit. This is certainly one of the fairest offers that can be made and any one who has catarrh and does not take advantage of it is doing himself or herself an injustice.

Do not suffer any longer with tickling, smarting, burning, eye-watering troubles that afflict those who have catarrh. Hyomei will cure you, but if you should not find it adapted to your case, L. A. Burrows will return your money.

Must Have Been Smoking Hemp.

The Wellsville Reporter article, Allegany's First Murder," was interesting to reading all right, but its author must have had a pipe dream, after taking a whiff from a corn cob pipe loaded with hemp when he added the finishing touches of the yarn, stating that the bark to the tree turned blood red on the occurrence of the anniversary of the murder. If allusion to that had not been mentioned we might swallow the whole tale, but that puts the whole story on the "hanks pank." Copy must have been scarce that day.

John Mitchell's Letters on Labor.

John Mitchell has gone to Europe. Everybody knows who John Mitchell is. It is an easy matter to recall that he is head of the United Mine Workers and that he piloted that organization thru the great coal strike. He is a strong man and a brainy man. He went to Europe primarily to attend the International Miner's Congress at Paris in August. But incidentally he purposes seeing something of Europe and naturally he will study labor conditions. The result of that study will be embodied in a series of letters now appearing in the Illustrated Buffalo Express.

Every employer, every employee, every student of pressing social problems will be intensely interested in these letters.

In granting a decree of divorce to a Missouri girl who had bought a foreign title with a scoundrel attached to it a St. Louis judge went outside the law a bit, but not outside the limits of truth and sound sense, when he said: "It is always the way that these foreigners treat their American wives. Ambitious mothers and cultivated daughters traveling abroad are constantly falling into such traps as these. The courts are full of such cases. It seems to me that mothers ought to wake up some time. The plaintiff is given a decree and the custody of the children."
