Enriched, Restored or Fortified?

Enriched—restored—fortified—are words often seen on food labels these days. And they do not all mean the same thing.

"Enriched" is a word properly used only for bread and flour. Definite legal standards have been set to say how much of certain food values must be added. Incidentally, this will also apply to bread baked with the new 80 per cent extraction flour, so America's daily bread will be even better in the future.

In "restored" foods, nutrients originally present in the food, but lost in processing, are put back. For example, breakfast cereals are sometimes restored to whole grain levels by the addition of thiamine, niacin, and iron.

When foods are "fortified", nutrients that were not originally present are added. Almost all margarine is fortified with vitamin A. Milk is sometimes fortified with vitamin D, which the body needs to make best use of the calcium and phosphorus in the milk.

Oatmeal vs. Bread

We've all heard about using less wheat products so that more grain can be shipped abroad to relieve the famine. One way to do this is to eat a little more oatmeal and a little less bread.

According to nutritionists, a serving of oatmeal equals two slices of bread in food value. And if every man, woman and school child would replace two slices of bread with a serving of oatmeal each week, this would mean 135,000 tons of wheat for the hungry in four months' time. Save a little and help a lot.

Dandelion Greens

This is the season for wild dandelion greens thruout most of New York State. Dandelion leaves are popular served in a tossed salad, with French dressing, and garnished with slices of hard-cooked eggs. Or some prefer them cooked, seasoned with salt and pepper, and flavored with butter, bacon, meat drippings, vinegar, or lemon juice.

Dandelions that grow in rosette form are easy to handle and to wash if you cut them off at the root crown so that the cluster of leaves holds together. Examine the dandelions, and discard any wilted or yellow leaves. Wash the greens in at least three waters, lifting them out of the pan before emptying the water so the sand that settles to the bottom may be discarded.

To cook dandelion greens, put them in a fairly large amount of boiling water in an uncovered pan, and allow them to simmer only until tender. Overcooking dandelion greens makes them bitter.

Close Poultry Culling Urged

Poultrymen of Allegany county are being urged to step up their culling rate the next few weeks and to market non-producing and low-producing hens in order to save feed and use the available supplies efficiently.

V. C. Stevenson, assistant county agricultural agent, points out that the recent rise in feed prices, including protein feeds, makes it more important than ever to do a good culling job in the interest of efficient egg production.

The need for grain is so tremendous that we cannot afford to waste it on loafing hens, and the feed poultry producers have available will be needed in the months ahead for their layers and growing chicks.

Intensive culling, therefore, will reduce production costs of both eggs and meat chickens and save much-needed grain.

Veterans Health Camp

The veterans in Allegany County are reminded that New York State maintains a convalescent rest camp for discharged members of the armed forces at Mount McGregor in Saratoga County.

Jack B. Moore, State Veterans' Counselor, of the Allegany County Veterans' Service Agency, advises that this is definitely not a hospital and men and women needing medical care will not be admitted. However, those in need of rest and recuperation opportunities will be accepted.

There is no charge made to veterans admitted to the camp. The veterans may remain there for a period of up to ninety days in any given year. Veterans interested in applying for admission should contact their State Veterans' Counselor at the local Veterans' Agency.

Keep on buying Victory Bonds.
