SUNDAY WORK.

Notwithstanding all the inconvenience caused by closing first and second class post offices Sunday, there will be much sympathy with the desire of postal clerks for a workless day of rest.

It hardly seems necessary that a post office employe should be kept from his family on the world's weekly holiday, while he's distributing picture post cards and advertising circulars into private boxes.

The post master general has made provision for newspapers and hotels really needing Sunday mail, and perhaps some few other classes of the public need such accomodation.

The average business man, however, would do better to break off the habit he has formed of getting his business mail Sundays in all places where the post office is open on that day.

If unfavorable news comes Sunday, he rarely can take any steps on that day to save himself from disaster. If good news comes, it will be just as good Monday morning.

It will do the business man good to dodge his ledgers and letters and listen to the songs of the birds instead of reading the howls of his customers because goods are not delivered. Or if he is not a church goer, the voice of birds in the woods will be much better than the grumblings of patrons.

The wear and tear of business grinds particularly hard on the man who insists on opening his mail Sundays. With all his assistants gone he feels helpless in the lonely silence of his store or factory. Difficulties seem mountains, and the rest day God and the law have given us is fretted away needlessly. If his mail lies until Monday, with his helpers around him difficulties will not seem half so big.

Of course the time the postal clerk works Sunday has been compensated for by the time given some other day. But such irregular rest hours don't count. Even a postal clerk likes to keep step with his fellow men, to work when they work, and play when they play.

REFLECTIONS AFTER LABOR DAY

It is but a year or two since the newspapers printed editorials for Labor Day, congratulating the laboring people on the scarcity of workers, and forecasting bad approaches for capital, because of the growing greed of the laboring class.

[illegible] the kaleidoscope of time [illegible] seem [illegible] year '12 [illegible] capital, seem as [illegible] of his [illegible] which has ever [illegible] the way to the [illegible] the Next, [illegible]

[illegible] the [illegible] of labor wars have been those where the condition of the workman was a primary consideration in building up an industry.

One type of employer bargains for his labor as he would bargain for his coal. If the labor of tender mothers and frail children or new aliens comes cheaper, he buys it in preference, with no more thought of social relation than if he were changing his coalman.

Another type of capitalist has always fought shy of the cruder industries where living conditions are low. "Let the other fellow have them, I'll wait for something else where I can employ my neighbors and give them homes with a bath tub and a back yard garden." The men from those homes much prefer to be hoeing the potatoes than heaving rocks at scabs.

Labor too, has had its sins equally with capital. In the narrow mind of the professional agitator, human problems become distorted. If a man employs his own boy to paint a chicken coop, he is an employer of scab labor and an enemy to the cause.

O for laborers and capitalists who can look at things from the other man's point of view!

THE PROBLEM OF HARVEST

It is not to be wondered at that the dispatches from the grain fields get hysterical at times, with fortunes waving in the balance as wheat sways in the wind.

"If you don't get a thousand harvesters out here this week, 100,000 acres of wheat go to waste," telegraphed one county the other day to a labor bureau.

The Easterner thinks of the Western farmer as rolling around the country in his automobile, while the checks pour in from the millers.

Actually this is about what happens: The farmer gets up at 4 a. m. and works until 11 p. m., his nerves astrain every time he sees a clouded horizon. The wife and a daughter or two are cooking for a score or two of men, and not a harvester in the field tolls as they do at their hot cook stove.

Here is one farmer's experience. He had 500 acres of as fine wheat as ever stood, which looked 40 bushels to the acre, good for a $7000 profit. He had been delayed in harvesting, but finally had teams and men engaged for a Monday. Friday a greenish-gray cloud loomed up in the Northwest, and rain with 16 minutes hail laid the wheat on the ground. A little of it was used for hay, but most of it rotted on the ground. The mortgage on the farm was foreclosed, and the farmer hired out to support his family.

The problem of getting in a hurry the 25,000 to 50,000 men that may be needed in a week is almost beyond human comprehension. The farmer visits the railroad stations hoping to gather in a few frowsy tramps from freight trains. Pale college fellows or even professors, with their glasses, solemn post graduate students, the riff raff of trampdom, ne'er do wells, and irregular hangers on from mines, quarries and railroads, are eagerly put to work, bewildered, brittle, flabby muscled. It is a motely crew, as green at farming as a landlubber at sea.

GUARDING INJURED MAN.

Patrick Shine, who attempted suicide at the home of his wife, in Coleman, Street in Olean, last week on Monday night with a large knife, is believed to be on the road to recovery. It has been necessary to guard against another attempt on his life and [illegible] Shine [illegible]

[illegible] the town in which we live? The answer will lay bare our real relation to God and man. If those whom we meet are immortal live[illegible] what must consistently be our attitude toward them? What shall the man who exploits the laboring class say before any throne of judgment in defence of such a plan? What shall they say who work women down to the point where they cannot possibly produce the proper kind of children? And they who quench the lives of boys and girls in the mills? And they who keep the workers in the ragged edge of want? And they who adulterate the food? And they who give short measure? And they who raise prices beyond the purchasing ability of the poor? And they who build tenements and unsafe factories? And they who vend the poison alcohol for a profit? What reverence for personality have such unnatural persons as those catalogued above? They will have hard shrift before any throne of judgment.

Dr. King illustrates in the following paragraph the attitude toward personality:

"The incident in John's gospel of the woman taken in adultery, in which it is said of Jesus, that he "stooped down and with his finger wrote on the ground," shows the response of Jesus to this basic and eternal principle of reverence for the person. For it is hardly possible to misinterpret this action of Jesus, as he stoops down and writes upon the ground. Anyone who has ever felt the intolerable sense of shame that arises, when he has been made an unwilling spectator of the needless public humiliation and breaking down of the self-respect of a servant, a child, wife, or a fellow man—will know what the feelings of Jesus must have been. He would not share, though unwillingly, in the cruel, brutal, needless humiliation of even a sinful woman, by adding to her load of shame, so much as the weight of a pitying look. She is no Thing that she should be thus handled about by men, but a Person, herself made in the image of the Eternal God." This attitude of Jesus is strikingly evident in his dealing with sinners whose sins had been made public. He had nothing but contempt for the Pharisees who outside were fair to look upon, but inside, were rotten as hell.

The last gem to lose—and losing that there is nothing left but the mercy-love of God—is self respect. Jesus came to revalue life, to build up a new sense of respect for one's self.

The proper appeal of the gospel of Jesus is to that which inviolable [illegible] while one's life of [illegible] [illegible] of immortal life. [illegible] proper place in the universe [illegible] that reverence for personality is the ultimate test of the individual's place in the world, as well as being the determining standard of civilization.

[illegible] Thing that she should be thus handled about by men, but a Person, herself made in the image of the Eternal God." This attitude of Jesus is strikingly evident in his dealing with sinners whose sins had been made public. He had nothing but contempt for the Pharisees who outside were fair to look upon, but inside, were rotten as hell.

The proper appeal of the gospel of Jesus is to that which inviolable [illegible] Reverence for the neighbor's personality. If I know myself and see before me an infinitely blessed future, shall I pass by my immortal neighbor? One can't. The evangelism that honors the human soul is the note of the future.

We are not crawling worms, but men and women of immortal stuffs, honored of God, loved by Him, sought after, wooed by the Son.

Let us live up to it.

Harnack says: "Jesus was the first to bring the value of every human soul to light."

A philosopher says truly, that he becomes a slave who treats another as a slave.

Whosoever has the spirit of the "boss," whether it be a hearth boss, male or female, work boss, industrial, political boss, church boss, has first or never gained respect for other people. He takes a lower place than the one whom he would over ride.

We do not love those whom we try to "boss."

The ideal home has no boss. Love goes out when the boss enters.

Mark that down, Oh unhappy ones. God's big enough to be a boss, but not small enough. He prefers to love. That's why He is God.

We are children of God and we should be treated as such. We are as immortal cleaning a sower as setting a substitution. We are as [illegible] consequently, to make one dollar do the work of two.

AND THE EXPERIENCED READER OF ADVERTISEMENTS WILL ALWAYS MAKE A DOLLAR COMMAND [illegible] BUT MORE THAN A DOLLAR'S WORTH, AS TURNED ON PRICING PRICES OF THINGS.

WHAT AN EX-CONVICT CAN DO.

William Burke, of Philadelphia, councilman and ex-convict, who has returned from confession and flight to try to make good as an honest man, receives assurances of faith that ought to give him a good even chance in life.

The pluck shown in facing his past indicates that there is good stuff in him, and the offers of friendship and trust indicate that the chance for the ex-convict is not so hopeless as is often said.

One reason for the pitiful and pathetic experiences of many former convicts in seeking work, is that they don't always seek opportunities for which their fitness is apparent.

Business competition is keen, and every business man in filling vacancies seeks to build up the morals of his force. He naturally looks for metal that has rung true in past strife. It might not be blindness in some man who have fallen to give them the key to the safe, combination or the make up of the pay roll, though that would not seem true on surface.

It is the force of business honor in [illegible] Western States shall then be beyond the reach of his little savings, there are always the worn out farms of the East to be had for a song, with the nearness to market partly compensating for the poorer land.

Of course there are many pitiful cases where a prison term so undermines a man's health, that farm tasks seem beyond his power. But even at that, an easy job in some stuffy office or store might be the worst thing for his enfeebled frame. Better keep out in the sunlight!

FARMERS' INSTITUTES FOR ALLEGANY COUNTY

At a meeting of interested parties in the Court House at Belmont last Thursday, it was decided to hold institutes in this county during the coming season as follows: At Byrnes, Centerville, Granger, Andover and Friendship, one day each, and a twoday institute at Belfast. At Andover will have a special institute [illegible] week after election.

A Business Proposition

Did you ever stop to think, Mr. Business Man, that the news of your business is as much a part of the local events as a wedding or a church fair? The ladies are just as much interested in a new fabric you have on the shelves as they are in any home happening. Your store news and announcements in these columns will reach a large circle of eager buyers. This will enable you to sell your goods while they are fresh and you will not have to [illegible]

VALUE OF FARM [illegible] AND FARM PRODUCTS

The total value of the products of all farms of the United States, as shown by the census returns for the years 1890, was $2,460,107,454; and in 1900, the same so far as farm products was $4,717,050,373.

There are no figures showing values of farm products for the last ten years, but the average, as disclosed by the figures above quoted, would be $3,488,578,913 annually.

The average annual value of the farm products of the United States for the last ten years has been $7,171,000,000, and for the past four years the average annual value of American farm products has been $8,412,000,000.

All of which helps to prove that the farmers of the United States during the past decade received the highest prices in the history of the world for their products.

Wouldn't it be a strange thing if these same farmers by their votes should bring about an abatement of their present prosperity, such as would follow the election of Wilson and Marshall and the Democratic inauguration of a tariff for revenue only, which would mean increased importations and reduced home production of manufactures, decreased demand for American agricultural products and decreased prices along with decreased consumption of such products?

The value added to manufactures in the United States, which means the difference between the cost of raw materials entering into manufacturing as compared with the total value of the products in each of the three years mentioned below, is as follows:

	Value added to manufactures
1900	$5,655,946,426
1905	6,529,187,533
1910	8,530,232,267

The total value of farm products, without deducting expenses of production, during two of the years above named, was as follows:

	Total value of farm products
1900	$4,717,050,373
1910	6,484,020,935

The cost of farm production is not immediately ascertainable, but it is manifest that the wealth added to the United States annually by manufacturing far exceeds that added by agriculture.

The producers of manufactures in the United States form the priceless home market for the products of our farms, very little of which is now exported.

If foreign manufactures are permitted to enter the United States in larger quantities than now, as would follow the adoption of a tariff for revenue pledged by the Democratic party, if elected, then there would necessarily be a reduction in consumption of our farm products, just as occurred during the panic years of industrial depression following the enactment of the Wilson tariff for revenue bill in 1894.

The inevitable result of a reduction in consumption of farm products in the United States would be a lower price. The farmer would receive less for what he produced. Is the farmer, then, the man who is to bring about tariff for revenue only by his vote?

In the New York Times of September 2, the following article appeared:

"A large seven-passenger touring car, valued at $5,000, belonging to P. L. Lynch, a real estate broker, of 364 Van Mouten Street, Patterson, was destroyed by fire last night between Hasbrouck Heights and Hackensack. The fire department was called out. The chauffeur, James Arlington, was accompanied by a young woman, and he refused to give his name or the name of his companion to the firemen. He said that when he tried to start the engine after it had stalled, it backfired and ignited the gasoline.

"Mr. Lynch, the owner of the car, says he had sent his brother and New York to get his brother and wife and bring them to Paterson today."

A great general once said that the fate of the army depended upon the kind of shoes the soldiers wore. Mr. Williams invites those who are not engaged at other church services to give this subject a consideration. Let every person in the town and vicinity be found in some house of worship regularly. It is most profitable.

Those who ignore the moral foundation of life ignore the essential. We are not concerned where people worship, how they express their worship, but that every human creature should be big enough for God is the absolutely important consideration.
