[illegible] ... Scot, of others who married, and placed Plymouth Rock on the sea's edge. But I think of the One Man, who was himself the living Rock, the righteousness of democratic institutions. Our vision is magnificent—it trails off into the glory of a kingdom in which all men shall be free and brothers all. We are conquering the giants and solving the problems—slowly, but moving on we are. Blessed is this nation because our God is God.

Have our standard of values declined Values are character; measures are quality; principles are honor; ideals are upreaching; and the logic of the universe demands first God's ideals and His righteous. Secondary matters will take care of themselves if we get first things in the first place.

Before we pack tents for another days' march let us tell the tale of blessings. Let us be glad for God first, and for such a God,—a Friend Let us be glad that we are men and women packed with such possibilities of life and joyance. Shall we thank God that he did not forget to put souls into our bodies? Let us be glad for friends, for homes, for children. Let us be good for work, and recompense, and rest. Let us be glad for this wonderful land, and the chance to stand straight up. Let us be glad we live in such beautiful surroundings. Think how we should miss the sky and hill and flowers and birds and grass. Let us thank God He sent his best beloved to give us helping hand out of the mire. Let us thank God so many human beings are interested to each other. Let us be glad and show our gladness. Let us pass our gladness on.

This will please God.

Chas. Sable, 30 Cooke St., Rochester, N. Y., reports the result of his taking Foley Kidney Pills for his attack of kidney and bladder trouble. "I must speak a good word for Foley Kidney Pills which I used for a severe case of kidney and bladder trouble. They gave me prompt relief and I recommend them at every opportunity."

Burying a Water Supply.

Most rodents are provident creatures and store a supply of food for winter use. The Egyptian jerboa, which is a kind of jumping mouse, is quite as thrifty as the rest of its race, but it is singular in this—that it stores up not food but water. The jerboa is found most generally in arid regions, in which the dry season lasts six months, during which time not even a drop of new rain falls. In these places, however, there grows, just at the close of the rainy season, a bitter but extremely juicy melon. As soon as it is ripe the jerboa gnaws through its stem, dig's away the earth beneath it and lets it drop into the hole thus formed. The wind soon covers it with sand, which not only conceals it, but also protects it from the heat. On the coming of the drought the jerboa seeks out one after another of these natural water barrels and slakes its thirst at them until the rainy season sets in once more. As the jerboa lays up a supply of from forty to fifty melons, there is no danger of its store of water running short.

Some came from China and others from Korea, but most of them appear to be of a more exotic origin. All, however, came of a time prior to the year 756.

Handy Life Insurance Policy.

A curious festival takes place annually in the village of Hobe, in the southern province of Japan, the Wide World says. The festivity is called the Omita and attracts large crowds from the neighboring districts. The young men, stripping off their clothing, take their positions in a rice field, where they struggle violently with one another for possession of a decorated bamboo pole. The man who succeeds in pulling the pole down promptly cuts it into pieces, which he distributes among his less fortunate competitors, retaining a portion for himself. It is believed that if any one meets with a storm out at sea he can easily save himself from a watery grave by simply throwing a portion of this pole into the sea. Dining Room Cranks.

The waiter became talkative after he had answered a question and among other things said: "Don't go to the funny ward at Bellevue if you want to study cranks. Get a job as waiter. The man who just went out is a steady. He's all right except for coffee and bread. He must have his coffee boiling hot, and he always puts a lump of ice in it. He has always paid for special hot bread. He gets a small loaf, cuts it in two, removes all the crumb part from one half and eats the crust. The other half he leaves untouched. I have a regular who puts salt and pepper on his grapefruit, and— "He could be talking yet," said the man who related the story, "if I hadn't told him that I was a crank on being served quickly."—New York Tribune.

FRAGNER & CORNWELL'S
Re-Arrangement Sale
IS NOW ON.

Since re-arranging the interior of our store we discover we have between $5,000.00 and $6,000.00 more in SUITS and OVERCOATS than we have room for. That in itself is as much stock as the most of the country stores carry.

This is our First Sale in Season

Do you think we would have it now if we were not overstocked? We believe the proper time to get rid of this surplus stock is to DO IT NOW, just the time when you need the goods. WE DON'T BELIEVE IN SALES DURING SEASON, it is something we have always fought against, but when we came to get our stock straightened around where we supposed it would give us ample space, we find we are no better off than before. WE ARE GOING TO MAKE QUICK WORK OF IT. WE HAVE PRICED THEM SO THEY WILL POSITIVELY NOT LAST LONG.

It Is Just Like Picking up Money

JUST THINK, everything in the way of MEN'S, BOYS' and CHILDREN'S heavy SUITS and OVERCOATS at a SACRIFICE, at just the time you want them.

We've the Finest Suits and Overcoats in Town

Everybody knows that. They are worth every cent they are marked. Note the cut in prices below, and in some instances where there is only one garment left of the lot, they will be cut much deeper.

PRICES.

The following prices will give you a small idea of what we have to offer in a few of the many lines, Men's and Young Men's made up in full and three-quarter lengths, convertable, plain and velvet collars, fancy plain goods:

WELLSVILLE.

Wellsville, N. Y., Nov. 24—Late Friday evening as James Duke and Connell Murphy were returning from Bolivar in Mr. Dukes Regal automobile, they noticed a light under the engine hood, which suddenly burst into flames. Fearing an explosion they applied the brakes and leaped from the car but not had gone more than fifty feet when the gasoline tank exploded with a terrific report, the flames shooting into the air and consuming the automobile in a very short time. Mr. Duke had just been discharged from the Wellsville General Hospital where he was laid up with a broken leg met in a recent automobile accident, and in jumping from his burning car he seriously strained the fractured limb. This is the second time in the last three months that these gentlemen have met with an automobile accident Mr. Duke having been injured each time, while Mr. Murphy has fortunately escaped injury. Although the car is t total wreck the loss is covered by $800 insurance.

Bolivar

Bolivar, N. Y., Nov. 20—Everybody is happy on account of the advance in oil, and if it goes to $2.00 there will be a hundred wells drilled the coming spring and season.

We are glad to report E. F. Stone, who has been sick with fever, to be up and will soon resume his business.

Wesley Mead, of Kasouth, had the misfortune to loose a large barn with his entire crop and tools by fire Sunday evening, also a tank of oil. The fire originated from steaming the tank of oil, which was near the barn. This is seemingly hard luck, just on the eve of the advance in market, for tanks don't fill as fast as they used to in "ye olden times."

A Wonderful Prodigy.

The king of prodigies died on June 27, 1725, at the age of five, after having astonished the whole world. His memory is preserved in the annals and is attested by evidence which has satisfied all the learned inquirers who have written about him. The infant, Christian Heinecken, was born of respectable parents in Eutsack, 1721. A few hours after his birth he began a conversation, at ten months there was scarcely a subject on which he could not express an opinion, and at a year and a month he had mastered both the Old and New Testaments. He was only two and a half when he was able to answer questions concerning anything in ancient and modern history, and he was also at this time an expert geographer. He spoke Latin and French and at the age of four was speaking in the French language at the court of Denmark. All this time he was being nursed by his mother. At the age of five it became necessary for him to be weaned, and in consequence of this change of diet he died, leaving psychologists an insoluble problem.—Westminster Gazette.

Politician and Other Bibles.

"You bibliophiles talk about the 'breeches' Bible, the 'bug' Bible, the 'politician' Bible, the 'vinegar' Bible, and so on. What do those names mean?"

"I'll tell you," the collector answered. "Take first the 'breeches' Bible. It is so called because a typographical error in it causes the garments made by Adam and Eve out of fig leaves to be termed breeches instead of aprons.

"In the 'vinegar' Bible of 1807 the word 'vineyard' is misprinted 'vinegar.'

"The 'printers' Bible, 1702, makes the psalmist say, 'Printers have persecuted me without a cause.'

"The 'religious' Bible, which was printed in 1657, put 'religious' for 'rebellious' in the fourth chapter, seventeenth verse of Jeremiah—'Because she hath been religious, * * * saith the Lord.'

"The 'politician' Bible was published at Geneva in 1652. It makes the famous verse 'Blessed are the peacemakers' read 'Blessed are the place makers.'"

A Radical Old Aristocrat.

"The old French aristocracy dies with me," cried the Princess de Valmont on her deathbed. She was a bitter old soul, who, born of a long line of uncontaminated ancestors and married to a noble of equally superfine strain, had, through her husband's death in financial difficulties, to marry her five children to "abominable persons" of high character, but with the blight of trade or industry in their blood. Her last years were made mournful to her by this pitiful descent, and just before her grandiose last utterance, looking with a bitter smile at her children and grandchildren in tears round her death-bed, she broke silence in the following terrible reflection: "We have here," counting on her fingers, "representatives of carriage making, wholesale grocery, confectionery, coal mining and the stock exchanges, and all grafted on the old tree of the De Valmonts."

The Value of Knowledge.

Mrs. Featherton had embroidered a gown for herself. Butterflies were the design, and she had made them look so natural that—so Mr. Featherton said—one would think they were actually alive. But Mrs. Featherton's little son was more critical. He regarded the decorative insects long and earnestly, opened his lips to speak and then, with remarkable self control for one so young, closed them again without speaking.

"Well, Frankie," said his mother at last, "tell me what you think of my butterflies."

"They are very nice, mother," replied he seriously, "but the next time you embroider butterflies would you mind putting the antennae on the other end?"—New York Press.

Occulation Conjugation.

Sam Slick once said that kisses were, like creation, made out of nothing and very good, and another American writer thus conjugated the verb "to kiss:" "'Buss,' to kiss; rebus, to kiss again; pluribus, to kiss without regard to numbers; syllabus, to kiss the hands instead of the lips; blunderbuss, to kiss the wrong person; erebus, to kiss in the dark; omnibus, to kiss every one in the room."

Persiflage.

"Hello, Jones! I hear you were sick."

"Yes; I was threatened with a fever, but the doctor succeeded in arresting it."

"Ah! He arrested it for making threats, I suppose."—Exchange.

Dr. Johnson's Politeness.

"Dr. Johnson is to be commended for his politeness," said a friend. "Yesterday I saw him bow to a lady who was selling apples."

"Politeness is a virtue," said the other, "and I hope I may be forgiven for my sins if I say that he is lacking in reverence. For on occasions he observably sells himself as substitute and goes willingly to the slaughter as a lamb to shearing, for parents with too small sons necessary to support them through life. The strength of an army is in team work, and here is where he fails on account of his aversion to being ordered. This is found in his domestic and industrial work. A general line of policy or desired results can be laid down, and he will faithfully work in accordance therewith, but he dislikes to be followed up through the details of the work with frequent orders. He will produce excellent results, but they must be accomplished in his own way; hence the essence of good militarism—prompt and unquestioned obedience—comes in direct conflict with his nature and makes him a poor soldier. However, this trait is not entirely wanting in other nationalities, as every business man knows to his sorrow, and the difficulty of getting employees to do a thing in the prescribed way is one of the constant anxieties.—H. H. Windsor in Popular Mechanics Magazine.

A Doubtful Introduction.

In Rubinstein's "Reminiscences" we read how the illustrious pianist went from Berlin to settle in Vienna, fortified by letters of introduction to various celebrities given to him by the Russian ambassador at the Prussian court. He presented several of them without any beneficial result, and it then occurred to him to tear open those which remained and read them. They all ran, he says, as follows:

"Dear Countess—Our position as ambassador and ambassadress imposes upon us the tiresome duty of patronizing and introducing all kinds of compatriots, who are often most importunate in their solicitations. I therefore now venture to introduce to you a certain Rubinstein, the bearer of this communication."

After that experience Rubinstein threw all his letters of introduction into the fire, and he got on a great deal better without them.

An Actor's Qualification.

Among the London Lyceum company of Irving's day was Evergreen Howe, a Quaker, of whom this story is told in the "Life of Martin Harvey:"

"Howe went to see Kean at Richmond and explained his desires. Kean listened more or less patiently, and Howe used to deliver his verdict, imitating his manner.

"'Why, Cockie, you are a Quaker, eh?' Kean said.

"'Yes,' admitted Howe.

"'And you want to go on the stage, do you, eh?'

"Again Howe admitted the accuracy of the estimate. Kean turned to him in his inimitable way and asked:

"'Well, Cully, can you starve?'

"'Not an encouraging suggestion,' Howe used to add. 'But Kean knew something of starvation as a passport to the stage,' he used to conclude grimly."

When Harmonies Are Exhausted.

Once during a conversation on music, when James Hinton, the English physician and philosophical writer, was among the company, some one suggested that "owing to the unlimited number of musical compositions a time would come when all music would only be a repetition of exhausted harmonies. Hinton remarked that then would come a man so inspired by a new spirit that his feeling would be not that all music has been written, but that no music has yet been written." Mr. Havelock Ellis cites the saying in "The Task of Social Hygiene," applying it to the domain of love.

Ancient Glass.

In the Slade collection at the British museum in London the most ancient specimen of pure glass the date of which can be approximately fixed is a small lion's head, bearing the name of an Egyptian king of the eleventh dynasty. That is to say, at a period which may be moderately placed at more than 2,000 years B. C. glass was made with a skill which shows that the art was far from new.

Through the Earth.

If there was a tunnel through the center of the earth and an iron ball was dropped into it where would the ball come to rest? Unless it was retarded by the resistance of the air the ball would go through to the other side and then fall back to its starting point, repeating this operation forever. If retarded by the resistance of the air it would ultimately come to rest at the center of the earth.

Why They Preach.

The distinction between a good preacher and a bad preacher has not changed much since Archbishop Whatelyp declared that "a good preacher preached because he had something to say and a bad preacher because he had to say something."

Pure Malice.

"The boys in my neighborhood broke a window last night."

"The playful exuberance of youth, of course."

"Nothing of the sort. It was my window."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Bears Take Possession of Town.

Mr. Prior, the English artist, who was a guest of the Duke of Devonshire at Bolton Abbey, was asked to tell a story at the dinner given to the Sir Evelyn Wood, who was seated next to the guest of the evening, commenced his speech thusly: "Our honored guest, Mr. Prior, has been in twenty-two engagements." Prior, prompting, "Twenty-two, my lord, twenty-two." Sir Evelyn continued, "In twenty-two engagements and has never seen a shot fired!"

The Lava Lake of Hawaii.

One of the large volcanoes in Hawaii has a large lake of liquid lava in its crater or hollow. This seething, boiling mass looks like rodhot bottle glass to the naked eye, but under the microscope pieces of the original rock of very minute size may be detected. Where it has cooled in curious formations along the "coast" it resembles slag from some mammoth furnace.
