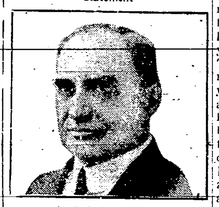
THE GREATEST HEALTH INSURANCE IN THE WORLD

T. P. Taylor, Prominent Louisville Druggist, Makes Interesting Statement



T. P. TAYLOR

"The greatest health insurance in the world is the simplest," he said. "I never could quite understand why people are so negligent in the use of the simplest of all preventives of illness. It's all a matter of keeping the bowels open. The man who carries a little box of Rexall Orderlies has got a good health policy in his pocket. I believe they are the best laxative ever prepared, and their pleasant taste appeals to men, women and children alike."

J. D. CHEESMAN & CO.,

TO RID CHILD OF WORMS

Don't scold the fretful, nervous child, often its due to worms. Get rid of these by giving one-half to one lozenge Kickapoo Worm Killer, a laxative worm candy. Give only plain nourishing food, lots of out-door exercise and put to bed early. Watch stools and continue giving Kickapoo Worm Lozenges, they will positively remove the worms. 25c at Druggists.—Advertisement.

PLANTING TREES

More Forest Trees Planted in New York State This Spring Than Ever Before

The College of Forestry at Syracuse, as a result of its study of conditions in New York, is emphasizing the idea that the ideal time for planting forest trees is during the last half of April and through May. The soil is then filled with abundant moisture; it has been loosened by the action of the frost; trees are easily dug and replaced in the ground and the entire process can be accomplished with less effort and greater promise of success than in any other season of the year.

The College of Forestry believes that success in the planting of forest trees depends to a large extent on the quality of planting stock that is used. The state nurseries under the control of the State Conservation Commission are filled with ideal stock for the reforestation in the form of both seedlings and transplants. So too, the nurseries operated under the State College of Forestry contain ornamental trees and shrubs which are supplied to schools only and which will soon be in prime condition for planting.

Forest seedlings are trees that have been grown one or more years in a nursery from seed without having been disturbed. It is not as well to use forest seedlings for plantations where there is any danger of a heavy growth of grass, weeds and underbrush. A larger tree will make a better fight when the ground is already occupied with vegetation. Only under exceptionally favorable conditions may seedlings be used with success.

Forest transplants are trees that have been grown in the nursery and moved at lease once from their original location as seedlings. Transplants are as a rule older than seedlings, of stronger growth and have better development of both root and crown. These should be used in every case where the ground is so covered with vegetation that there will be strong competition for moisture and light.

The College of Forestry at Syracuse will be glad to furnish application blanks showing species and price of trees which may be furnished by the state. Why not start a plantation this spring? Put a small woodlot on your abandoned fields. It will add to the sale value of the farm and will be a constant source of interest and pleasure. Fill the open places in the woodlot with young evergreens; plant the steep hillsides and gullies. Nothing but trees will make your idle land productive. Trees will do as much and more for the land than paint does for the buildings and both together will make the farms of the state appear not only more prosperous, but will actually add to the value and prosperity of the farm and the farmer.

BUSINESS

The man of business is strictly business; he understands business. He does business and he is full of business; he does not meddle in other people's business. To worry others with your business is not business; if you let others know your business you will soon be out of business. To get into trouble is your business—to get you out is the lawyers business. If a man loves a lady, that's his business; if a lady loves a man, that is her business; soon they are married, that's their business; if they have children, that's their business. If you want a few good magazines with your Andover News at cheap rate, that's your business. That shows you know good business.

THE FORUM

APPLE SEED JOHN

By Rev. V. L. Eggleston

The ideal preacher of the last generation was a man who went on foot through the newly settled farming regions of Michigan stopping at every house and offering to plant gratuitously a superior variety of apple seeds. At the same time he preached the gospel as he understood it, not to congregations but to individuals and families. He was an odd genius and they called him "Apple Seed John" and if the word "crank" had been invented then he would probably have been called "Crankey John." A crank you know, is a man with an idea, and John had an idea and a great many people are to-day eating the fruit of his planting, without knowing or caring who planted it. The man dies but his work goes on. Apple-Seed John is immortal both as to his physical and spiritual work.

The most important step that could be taken in human evolution would consist in a willingness to work in obscurity, thinking only of the work and of its fruits, not of the present pay or future glory to the individual. We all have a theory of this kind but the hardest thing in the world is to practice it. Of course the day laborer is expected to sell his work, as a farmer sells his produce, at the highest market price, and in every position work and pay are inseparably connected, that is the man must live, but after the actual necessities of life are provided for there is a field of work and of pay quite indpeendent of money.

In this field the number of workers and the quality of the work depends upon the stage of evolution to which the human mind has attained. Every person of any elevation of character unconsciously labors in this field to some extent. Every act of personal kindness, every good deed that goes unrecorded and unpaid, every act even of common politeness belongs to this sphere. The question is not whether unselfish usefulness is practicable. It would be hard to imagine an organized society in which it was not practiced. The question is how far and into what fields such usefulness should be or may be carried. But it would be of little value to reason or philosophize upon it.

No one was ever argued into unselfish conduct. Philanthropists, like poets, are not made. They are born. But poetic talent may be cultivated and the philanthropic turn of mind may be cultivated. The thought of leading a useful life and of measuring success by the completeness of life may be developed in the mind of all children of the higher type. It is a pity that so great a part of the conversation to which children listen relates to moneymaking sucess. The most real and effectual schooling that children get is in the form of the conversation to which they so eagerly listen at home and among their play-mates. The government to which they are subjected at home and at school is generaly disagreeable, and they do not practice in life the moral percepts thus imposed upon them. But what they hear in the way of earnest conversation in which the affairs of daily life are discussed makes a deep impression and actually mould the character. Good luck, getting rich, eclipsing others at school, in society, in politics, in business, these are the subjects of common conversation and the child grows up with the idea that the chief end of man is to "beat" somebody. He grows up with the idea that the thing to work for is money and the highest position is that which fills the largest place in the eyes of the world and commands the biggest salary.

Theoretically all agree that the true purpose of life is to live for God and humanity and to consecrate all our talents and abilities to that service, but whenever any one can be got to speak out frankly and sincerely in the matter he says that such living is only an ideal to which all should aspire and to which mankind in some future golden age may attain but which for us, in this day and generation, is quite impracticable, and as the great majority of people are situated there is force in this view but when all allowances of this kind have been made there remain two facts that even the most practical must agree to, namely that all mankind may progress gradually towards the unselfish theory and practice of life and that many individuals are already in a position to realize in a high degree this ideal, and best of all it is true that genuine happiness in life and success in the highest sense depend upon the degree to which we attain to this genuine high living.

Those who seriously aspire to the higher plane of life and who commence in time are usually able to surround themselves with the necessary circumstances. The excuse that circumstances are unfavorable is quite apt to be made by those who would not rise even if they could. If circumstances are partly responsible the nature of the individual is still more so. A nature born to the higher life is very apt to come into possession of its true inheritance.
