GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES.

Work of Uncle Sam's Board That Revises and Corrects Them.

An obscure but interesting government institution is the United States geographic board at Washington. Not many people know of its work, which consists in determining for the government departments the correct names that are used in postal guides, in official reports and on maps.

A great many things interfere with uniformity in geographical nomenclature. The postoffice department sometimes calls a postoffice by a name that does not correspond to the name of the town where that postoffice is.

Then there is the corruption of a name that comes with time. London's "Rotten Row," which was originally "Route du Roi," is perhaps as remarkable an example as can be found anywhere. Thus Coanjock bay, in North Carolina, becomes by local usage Coinjack; Minster, in Ohio, becomes Minister, and Rolland, in Michigan, becomes Rowland. Sometimes these corruptions are so generally accepted that they take the place of the original. Thus Valcken Eyland (Falcon island), named by the Dutch in 1614, is corrupted into Fawkner's island, then Falkner's island and finally Falkland's island. The accepted name at present is Falkner island, and this name has the sanction of the geographic board.

Where there has been an absolute change from one name to another the board consults local feeling, and if the verdict is nearly unanimous it follows local usage. Usually such changes are in the direction of greater refinement. Thus Hog island in Maine has become Appledore island, and Hog island in Long Island sound is now known as Center island. Sometimes the desire to change a name is inspired by other motives. The people of Virginia, wishing to honor the memory of the first state geologist, attempted to change the name of Elliott knob to Rogers knob. But, since the first name was well established, the board gave it sanction, and Elliott Knob is now official.

In some cases confusion arises because explorers have "discovered" the same spot and given it different names. Cape Disappointment, on the coast of Washington, got its name from Meares in 1788. Four years later Gray named it Cape Hancock, and for some time it was known indifferently as Cape Hancock or Cape Disappointment. The originai name has now been restored.

The board exists only by virtue of executive order and has never been recognized by congress. Its members are officials from a few of the departments and bureaus at Washington, who serve without compensation.—Youth's Companion.

More people have come to pleasant and profitable "turning points" in their lives through having answered classified ads than through all other circumstances combined. Do you want to arrive at a "turning point" pretty soon?

THE FORUM

THE HIGH COST OF WAR.

By. Rev. V. L. Eggleston.

When we read of the war expenditure of $100,000,000 a day we wonder that even the great nations of Europe are able to bear up under the burden. We are inclined to wonder how future generations will be able to carry the enormous burden of taxation which must follow.

Did it ever occur to the reader that the enormous destruction falls not so much upon that which is known as "wealth," as upon material which is either being produced during the war or upon ships, guns, forts, ammunition, etc., which has already been paid for in the years before the war.

True it is that coming generations will have to pay taxes, but the holders of Government bonds in these generations to come will receive the interest (taxes), and if this great wide-world war catastrophe will only emphasize the idiotic fiendish, and criminal practice of senseless striving for naval and militaristic supremacy, the world will be using the new savings in the development of all good things that make for human happiness and comfort.

We are inclined to pity the inhabitants of those countries where the expense of war falls most heavily. But the world of to-day is different from the world in the time of former huge wars. The prosperity of one nation is closely related to the prosperity of every other great nation today. The increasing cost and scarcity of labor in the warring countries has brought hundreds of thousands of women into the field of manual labor. When the war is over there will be millions of men released to take up their former labors. Europe has made wonderful strides in respect to increasing the quantity and lowering the cost of production.

The problem we are to face is this: Just previous to the war this country was wallowing in the slough of an unprecedented industrial depression, building, manufacturing, reconstruction — in short, nearly all industry was suffering from the effect of "panic-times." Then came the war with its huge demand for food and munitions. Suddenly industry sprang to life. Wages rose, bonuses were paid to workmen, dividends galore and extraordinary were paid and we find ourselves in the very hay-day of financial and industrial well-being. Many wise executives of great corporations and firms, and farsighted individuals as well, realize fully that it is a prosperity which is founded upon abnormal conditions. The physician, grocer, dry goods man, banker, clerk and workingman, respectively, has gained through the universal impetus given to industry by "war orders." The day is approaching when this huge demand will suddenly stop. Plants must re-adapt themselves to supplying the demand for goods that fill the wants of men in times of peace. Either the wage-earner must produce more or receive less than he is getting on to-day's false foundation prosperity. Just as the great business men of today are not paying out all their profits in dividends and plant enlargement, so must we as individuals begin to "hedge" a little. We should be careful about borrowing more money for plant expansion than the immediate future will handle; we must not let the high wages of to-day blind our eyes to the disturbances of the days immediately following the close of the war; in fact, we must bear in mind that "preparedness" for peace to-day is as important as "preparedness for war of yesterday.

WILL SLOAN'S LINIMENT RELIEVE PAIN?

Try it and see—one application will prove more than a column of claims. James S. Ferguson, Phila., Pa., writes: "I have had wonderful relief since I used Sloan's Liniment on my knees. To think after all these years of pain one application gave me relief. Many thanks for what your remedy has done for me." Don't keep on suffering, apply Sloan's Liniment where your pain is and notice how quick you get relief. Penetrates without rubbing. Buy it at any Drug Store. 25c.—Advertisement.

Waiting to buy it "right?" To-day may be the right day — so consult the ads with care.

MAKING PUNS UPON NAMES.

A Peculiar Brand of Humor That Was Once Quite Popular.

In the days of Theodore Hook and his merry friends jokes upon proper names were quite the thing, and while the auditors grinned the victim bore the infliction with as much dignity as he could summon up. As a specimen of Hookian wit of this kind the following may serve: "A humorist of this epoch (I am not quite sure whether it was the sprightly Theodore himself), invited to the house of a Mr. Pepper, greeted his host with the words, 'How happy you must be, Mr. Pepper, to see your friends all mustered!'" A better instance, perhaps, is Hook's impromptu when a tax collector called Winter was seen to be at the door:

Here comes Mr. Winter, collector of taxes,
I advise you to pay him whatever he axes.
You had much better pay him without any flummery,
Though Winter's his name, his proceedings are summary.

The most fearsome and complete pun of this kind was made by an examiner who had to tell a certain undergraduate the result of his viva voce. The undergraduate's name was Field Flowers Goe, and he subsequently attained some eminence in the church. The verdict was, "The Field is plowed, the Flowers are plucked, and you, sir, can Goe!"

There is a variety of the pun upon a name, however, that one is almost inclined to forgive or at least to regard with a certain leniency. It is when some familiar quotation is given an apt twist which brings in the cognomen of the victim. One of the best of this kind is attributed to Sir William Harcourt. Listening to a long descended baronet named Knightley descanting on the antiquity of his family, the politician was heard to misquote a well known hymn as follows:

And Knightley to the listening earth
Recounts the story of his birth.

From the United States comes the story of an unwilling auditor of Senator Lodge, who, as the senatorial eloquence showed no signs of ceasing, muttered to his neighbor, "Oh, for a Lodge in some vast wilderness!"

James Payn, the novelist and editor, was notoriously averse to physical exercise. A gentle stroll from the Cornhill offices in Waterloo place to the Reform club was the limit of his pedestrianism. So it was not strange that he showed signs of acute discomfort on a country ramble. As the party climbed a steep acclivity in the course of the walk one of them, noticing the novelist's distress, whispered to another, "The labor we delight in physics Payn."—New York Sun.

Did you ever wonder why the wicked and godless man or woman seems to prosper and enjoy happiness while the good person so often is tried, persecuted and cast down? A man in Old Testament times looking at it all nearly lost his religion. He said "as for me my feet had well nigh slipped when I beheld the prosperity of the wicked. But "there's a reason" and the pastor will endeavor to throw the light of the word of God on the problem in this sermon. A service for everybody. Everybody welcome.
