An exchange insists that no one ever plays golf they work.

This life is just one great eat after another—when we can get the eats.

• • •

Every time the dove of peace tries to light in Mexico the buzzards scare it away.

• • •

The bark of a dog or the grunt of a pig is sublime music to the growl of the chronic grouch.

• • •

No man is ever so great but what a dirty street urchin can make him look like 30 cents.

• • •

We learn of some bets made on election that were paid too soon. Best be sure before settling.

• • •

The advent of November brings peace in Europe another month nearer, But, Oh, Lord, how many years?

• • •

Allegany County's Republican majority has been trimmed down to a small 3,500. It used to be around 4,500.

• • •

Many a good man has been classed as questionable because he didn't have the nerve to live up to his convictions.

• • •

Vast number of new dimes have been put into circulation recently. But bring the old ones along. we'll take them dirt and all.

• • •

In a learned discourse an exchange tells us why hair falls out. We note that he did not attempt to tell our baldheads how to fall it in again.

• • •

Of course there will be a lot of dead carcases lying around after the election, but the lure of the public crib will bring them back of life again.

• • •

A lesson the recent election should bring to us is that if you really must bet on election, bet with your wife and keep the money in your family.

• • •

Good men in public office are often hard to get, but human nature is so perverse that once we get them we are never satisfied until we get rid of them.

• • •

Some of these days, perhaps, national and state candidates for office will learn that if they want to impress their own particular merits upon the rural voters they will have to use the columns of the rural press, the home paper of the man they seek to reach. The average city daily does not exert any great political influence in the rural districts.

• • •

Now that the smoke of the political battle is drifting away, perhaps we can get down to business and dig up a little prosperity for this community. We have all whooped it up for our favorite candidates and given them the benefit of our influence and our votes, all of which they will promptly forget. If we are equally energetic in whooping it up for our local community we may accomplish some definite and tangible results that will bring at least a semblance of prosperity to us.

The president of the Anti-Suffrage Organization wrote to the Commissioner of Agriculture of West Virginia and begged him to help defeat the woman suffrage amendment to be voted on in that state on the coming election day. The lady could not have found a more answer pleasant reading, for, after enumerating various reasons why he believed in votes for women, he declared that his chief reason lay in the sort of people who opposed woman suffrage, which included every sort of crook known and he added, "The surprising thing to me is that there is still in this country a sufficient number of well-informed patriotic law-abiding respectables to form a National Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage."

OUR CONGRATULATIONS

As this is written, Thursday afternoon, the result of the election lies in as much obscurity as it did Tuesday evening when the polls closed.

President Wilson needs the electoral votes of California and New Mexico to win and Justice Hughes needs them as well.

But whoever is elected the News will give loyal support, with a patriotic fervor that will be unmasked by political influences.

We worked for, wanted, and now hope for the election of President Wilson, for reasons already stated in these columns. But should the election puzzle be unraveled in the favor of Justice Hughes we will accept the verdict of the people with as great a desire for his success as we would had the candidate of our choice been elected.

Whoever receives the majority of the electorial votes, at the official canvas, we wish a successful and prosperous administration We will have for president just as good a man as any one else, be he Republican or Democrat.

Both men are able, and we believe, sincere men and either will do his very best to give the United States a wise and honorable administration.

We do not envy the man who will be inaugurated President next March. He has on his hands a most exasperating ordeal. To give all of the varied interests of this country a square deal and not do injustice to any is a near impossibility, to say nothing of the tremendous task our next president will have dealing with foreign affairs.

Here's wishing the next President of the United States the very best that we have to offer, be his name Woodrow Wilson or Charles E. Hughes.

JOHN MORTON GREEN

John Morton Green, son of William B and Caroline Clarke Green, was born on the farm now occupied by his son, November 29, 1856, and died at his late home in Independence, November 1, 1916.

December 4, 1878, he was married to Miss Addie Livermore and to them were born three sons, Clayton, Albert and William. These remain to cherish the memory of a loving and devoted father. He is survived by his wife, three sons, and one sister, Mrs. G. H. F. Randolph, of Borea, W. Va. One sister, Jennie, died in childhood.

When a young boy, in the pastorate of Rev. Jared Kenyon, he united with the Independence Seventh-day Baptist Church, of which he remained a loyal and useful member until called to the life beyond. For many years he has been a faithful and efficient trustee of the church, and to the duties of his office he has given much of personal service often at no little sacrifice of time and effort.

He was a man of strong convictions and will, helpful and generous to those in need. He was large hearted. He looked on the bright side and was kindly and sympathetic in his judgment of others. As a Sabbath School teacher, trustee of the church, citizen, neighbor and friend he has left a lasting impression on the community in which he has so long lived.

The large number of people in attendance at the farewell services held in the church at Independence on Novembr 4th, and conducted by his pastor, Rev. Walter L. Greene, witness to the universal esteem and respect in which he was held.

Sign Boards on the Up-road

By Hamilton B. Williams

The following is an editorial taken from The Continent, a great religious newspaper:—

Earnest Lay Churchmanship alone can give the church momentum. Ministers lead, but laymen make the church.

The pastor is the one to start the church moving, but the decisiveness with which it arrives depends wholly on the lay weight it carries and the lay vitality energizing it.

Preaching likewise is never to be dispensed with or disparaged. But the sway of God's ways and will is not to be established by preaching alone. Religion and its requirements must be clinched everywhere by practical demonstration. What is lived is what the world accepts.

This is true even concerning the personal gospel of repentance, forgiveness and conversion. Evangelists may declare ever so convincingly God's offer of salvation but it takes hold slowly unless those who hear the message see around them life-proofs of the reality of the grace proclaimed.

Even more essential is the living example behind the social gospel.

This social interpretation of the principles of Jesus, applying to the integrity of business, adjustment of industrial conflicts, mitigation of poverty, improving of housing, and so on forth, has now been pretty thoroughly disseminated.

Yet it has not taken hold as it should. People approve it in theory. But they don't observe it largely. The common comment is that it's too fine and airy to work in a real world.

And the preacher by himself can never overcome that. The only clinching that can make his truth hold fast in the consciences of people is nothing less than outright doing of it by some soul heroic enough to dare the experiment.

Always there stands in the way the suspicion of the world that the preacher is too isolated and insulated to be an accurate judge of concrete conditions in secular pursuits.

One thing only quenches objections. That one thing is for an ordinary, everyday man of the world, with no pretensions to special sanctity and no immunities or advantages making his case exceptional, to take Christ's program and do business by it, meeting the circumstances of competition successfully, serving his patrons efficiently and winning a good name for those who receive his wages.

Beyond all comparison this is the paramount duty of the American Christian layman to-day. It is of course called on for many other things—to give money for missions and other benevolences, to sustain the church's services, to serve on committees and boards.

But none of these touch the main bill of requirements. The main duty laid on the layman is this duty to stand up before the onlooking eyes of a critical world and play the part of demonstrator for the goods that heaven offers humanity to salve its festered body and clothe its naked soul.

To meet such obligations laymen need to be more spiritual.

By reaction from what was without denial a too garrulous and too unctuous type of piety in former days, the layman to-day has stored his soul away in artificial refrigeration. He is at not quite as much pains for anything else as to keep himself cool spiritually.

The background of this disposition is the widely diffused sentiment that right living is the real religion—that if a man lives cleanly and usefully in the world there is nothing more for him to want of God or for God to want of him.

And, indeed, a fixed determination to do thus and so because it is right, coldly and abstractly considered, serves very well for ordinary times when right runs parallel with profit and honor.

But in the times, not unknown in any life, when the abstract right begins to cost something, the hard bare, stony consideration of one's conscientious resolve is a comfortless thing to cling to.

In such a time a man needs feeling — strong feeling, living feeling—the feeling of God in Christ present as a friend and lover.

It may be written large that the Christian who is afraid of spirituality, who holds to a juiceless, unemotional moralizing as a sufficient Christian note in his character, is going to be void of inspiration and empty of comfort in life's crises.

Unless literally he would rob himself of strength and use in the Christian way, he must seek mean of devotional growth more diligently—must learn the secret especially of reaching God hand to hand through ever and more and more habitual prayer.

Prayer is man's noblest privilege. Neglecting it is sadly ignoble.

The present-day layman needs also keener understanding.

The ignorance of the typical American Christian on matters of moment concerning the kingdom of God is a grevious weakness.

It roots in his ignorance of the Bible.

How shall a man expect to do God's work in his own generation if he does not know what God's work is? and where is he going to learn to be wise concerning the purposes of God unless he has traversed deeply the revelation of God's mind in the Scriptures?

Only one degree less important than this—and as sadly neglected—is the present-day Christian's needed knowledge of what is abroad in the world now of evil and good, of hindrance and help to the righteousness of Christ.

Rarer than Bible study even among Christian laymen of this generation is an extensive and well digested knowledge concerning the current progress of religion. Scraps of information here and there many persons pick up, but painstaking, thoughtful attention to the moral trend of events at large and their meaning for the church, is so rare that it seems a curious freak.

For lack of this broader view the laymen of to-day are commonly parochial men, addicted to ways that usage has made common in their own localities, unintelligent concerning better ideal and methods that have approved themselves in the life of the Christian commonwealth at large, and often readier to obstruct than to welcome effective innovations which their pastors urge.

The present-day layman needs finally more whole-heartedness.

So much religion impresses the onlooker as religion willing to go just so far. It will follow as long as it can afford to.

Assuredly the contemporary war in Europe has demonstrated that a force moving on that kind of limited liability can never conquer.

What general would march against an enemy with an army whose soldiers reserved the right to stop every day and decide whether prudence indicated that it was wise to venture farther?

And not even the omnipotence of King Jesus will avail to overthrow the reign of evil in this world as long as the most of his soldiery are committed to him on a basis of such reserve only—agreeing to give him just as much service as it seems to them does not involve too much risk.

Buffalo, Nov. 9.—Aside from victory which Congressman Charles B. Smith, Democrat, won in the 41st congressional district where the Republicans have an advantage of 8,900 in the affiliations, the G. O. P. swept Erie county in yesterday's election. The city and county went as the nation went.

Republican majorities ranged all the way from about 5,000 for Hughes to approximately 18,000 for District Attorney Guy B. Moore.

Of the nine assemblymen, the Republicans elected six, and two of the three state senators.

Congressman Daniel A. Driscoll lost his district, the majority for his opponent, William F. Waldow, being 468, with only 15 districts in the towns missing.

Hi Johnson to U. S. Senate.

San Francisco, Nov. 9.—A plurality of 200,000 for Governor Hiram W. Johnson, Republican candidate for senator, was claimed at Republican state headquarters at the close of the polls. "HE FELL IN LOVE WITH HIS WIFE"

It may sound like a queer title for a photoplay, but if you like a story well acted, well staged, and with popular players, you will not fail to see why and how "He Fell in Love With His Wife," at the Auditorium, Saturday evening.

This production opens with a situation that grips your interest and holds it through to the finish. Many and unexpected complications arise, but FLORENCE ROCKWELL as Alida Armstrong gives a portrayal of charm and sweetness that will completely win you. FORREST STANLEY, as James Holcroft, is the same fine looking, manly actor that has appeared in other productions from the Pallas studios.

The book has enjoyed such a large sale that is now one of the standard works of English fiction.

FAMOUS ROMAN ROADS.

Public Highways as They Were During the Reign of the Caesars.

In Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" occurs the following description of the famous Roman roads:

"Under the reign of the Caesars the proper Asia alone contained 500 populous cities, enriched with all the gifts of nature and adorned with all the refinements of art.

"All these cities were connected with each other and with the capital by public highways, which, issuing from the forum of Rome, traversed Italy, pervaded the provinces and were terminated only by the frontiers of the empire. If we carefully trace the distance from the wall of Antoninus to Rome and from thence to Jerusalem it will be found that the great chain of communication, from the northwest to the southeast point of the empire, was drawn out to the length of 4,080 Roman miles.

"The public roads were accurately divided by milestones and ran in a direct line from one city to another, with very little respect for the obstacles either of nature or private property. Mountains were perforated and bold arches thrown over the broadest and most rapid streams. The middle part of the road was raised into a terrace which commanded the adjacent country, consisted of several strata of sand, gravel and cement and was paved with large stones, or in some places near the capital with granite. Such was the solid construction of the Roman highways, whose firmness has not entirely yielded to the effort of fifteen centuries.

"They united the subject of the most distant provinces by an easy and familiar intercourse, but their primary object had been to facilitate the marches of the legions, nor was any country considered as completely subdued till it had been rendered in all its parts pervious to the arms of authority of the conqueror. The advantage of receiving the earliest intelligence and of conveying their orders with celerity induced the emperors to establish throughout their extensive dominions the regular institution of posts.

"Houses were everywhere erected at the distance of only five or six miles, each of them was constantly provided with forty horses, and by the help of these relays it was easy to travel a hundred miles in a day along the Roman roads."

Voice and Art.

"Why in the name of all the saints," asked the master, "have you come back to Bologna—you, the most accomplished singer in the world?"

"Because," said the pupil—"because—because, dear master, I feel that I don't yet really know how to sing."

"My son," was the reply, "that is what none of us shall ever know on this earth. In the next world there may be more time, for when we are young we have the voice, but not the art, and when we are old we have the art, but not the voice."—Exchange.

JOHN BARRYMORE

In an Adventurous Comedy, "Nearly A King," Wednesday Evening.

"Nearly A King," one of the most novel screen comedies ever conceived, gives John Barrymore a wider field for the display of his unique comedy talents and amazing versatility than any other photoplay in which he has ever appeared, because it combines with screamingly funny situations moments of the tenderest romance and scenes of gripping, thrilling suspense. The story embraces every phase of the play-wright's art, from farce to melodrama, from sentiment to adventure. It contains a plot that is fascinating in its varied appeal, and is further distinguished by the fact that for the first time since his association with the screen, Mr. Barrymore interprets two characters simultaneously. The fact that one is an American and the other a Prince, whose romances become confused, adds to the interest. In the end, however, each marries the girl of his heart, but not until they have proceeded through the most startling and humorous series of trials and adventures possible to imagine.
