WELLSVILLE PEOPLE ARE KILLED

Auto Accident Sunday Near Holland Results in Four Deaths and Four People Injured.

Four persons were killed, three of them residents of Wellsville and four others were injured in an automobile accident two miles north of Holland shortly before 8 o'clock Sunday morning. Those killed were Hiram Harris, 68, of Wellsville; Mrs. John Crowner, 23, of Wellsville, daughter of Mr. Harris; Mrs. Will Manning, 67, of Potter Brook, Pa., aunt of Mr. Harris and Lois Crowner, the little two-year-old daughter of Mrs. John Crowner. The little girl died of a fractured skull a short time after the accident.

The injured were Mrs. Hiram Harris, Mrs. Robert Crowner, Sr., Miss Ildra Harris and Carl Harris, all of Wellsville.

The eight people, all members of the same family, left Wellsville some time before 6 o'clock Sunday morning in a Studebaker touring car for Niagara Falls to spend the day. Carl Harris, one of those injured, was driving the car. When at a point about two miles north of Holland, a car going in the same direction as the Harris car, signaled to pass and Mr. Harris drew over on the right shoulder to let them go by. Altho the survivors in the Harris car are unable to tell the exact circumstances of the accident and there were no other known witnesses to the tragedy, it is understood that the passing car cut in too close, catching the Harris car on the left front wheel. The big Studebaker careened into the ditch and finally came to a stop with great impact against a tree. The driver of the other car did not stop and state police and Erie county authorities scoured the countryside for the car, which is believed to have been a red roaster with the top down. However, no word has yet been received that the hit and run driver has been apprehended.

The three who were killed instantly, Hiram Harris, Mrs. John Crowner and Mrs. Manning, were thrown from the car and received fractured skulls. Little Lois Crowner was rushed to the Buffalo General hospital with a fractured skull and died only a short time after the crash.

The other four in the car were considerably bruised and cut, but all are expected to recover. Mrs. Hiram Harris was considerably bruised about the neck and body, and suffered greatly from shock. She is reported as resting comfortably. Mrs. Robert Crowner, Sr., besides bruises, had five ribs cracked. Miss Ildra Harris, at first reported critically injured, was expected to be discharged from the Buffalo General hospital Monday. Carl Harris, the driver of the car, was bruised and had both hands cut.

A triple funeral service was held Wednesday afternoon at the Crowner home on Brimmer Brook for three of those who lost their lives in the accident, Hiram Harris, his daughter, Mrs. John Crowner, and baby, Lois Crowner. The funeral of Mrs. William Manning was held at the same time at her home at Potter Brook, Pa.

Charles Corbett

Charles Corbett, aged 59 years, died Sunday night, Sept. 8th, at St. James Mercy hospital, Hornell. Deceased was a resident of Hartsville and had been to Hornell Saturday night with a neighbor. Getting out at the neighbor's home he was walking to his own place when struck by a hit and run driver. He suffered a fractured skull and leg and internal injuries from which he never regained consciousness. Deceased was a brother of Joseph Corbett of this village. Funeral services were held Wednesday at the community church at Hartsville. Burial was in the Cline cemetery.

TRYING TO MAKE A MOUNTAIN OUT OF A MOLEHILL

(Political Advertisement)

There has been so much exaggeration and misrepresentation of the Retirement Fund feature by those opposing the candidacy of D. S. Burdick for renomination as County Treasurer that some actual facts and figures seem to be in order.

First, it is not true that if Mr. Burdick were to serve another term he could then retire with a pension of $1,700 or year, as stated. The highest he could receive would be something over $1,300—made up by income from money paid in by himself and other officials thru a period of years, by an appropriation from the state, and a small amount from the county, which latter amount is decreasing yearly and will before long be eliminated altogether.

Last year the officials of Allegany County who are members of this fund paid into it a total of $1,744.-53. The county appropriation, covering all the 12 officials, who are now active members as well as those who have retired, was $1,340.25. This was LESS THAN TWO AND A HALF CENTS ON EACH THOUSAND DOLLARS of valuation of the county.

Remember this covers ALL the members of the fund in the county, active and retired, and that even it will soon disappear entirely.

Remember, also, that in case a new incumbent is put in the Treasurer's office and joins the Retirement Fund, the cost to the county on his behalf will be practically THREE TIMES AS MUCH as it could possibly be if Mr. Burdick is retained.

A single error or the use of poor judgment, due to inexperience or carelessness in the Treasurer's office, could easily cost the county many times as much in one year as the total appropriations to the Retirement Fund for all the county officials will ever amount to.

The Biography of Comrade William McDonough

Written for the News by W. G. POPE

When a person has reached his 91st year and is still rather active, hearty and hale, he at once becomes an object of interest to his neighbors and acquaintances. But when this man's life has been filled with hard labor, perilous adventure and war service, they are doubly interested. Such is our motive for "The Biography of William McDonough."

At 13 months of age Bill was as fine and happy a boy as could be found in the whole Emerald Isle. Happy, too, was the young mother, for she and her son would soon be crossing the Atlantic to meet the proud father and husband, who had gone ahead to America. So it was to this happy waiting pair that the telegram came, telling how the young carpenter, had been killed by the falling of a scaffold.

Thus fate at one blow seemed to make unnecessary and impossible the trip to America. Yet at the age of nine years we find Bill and his widowed mother landing in America. The next few years were hard years, years to make or break. Bill became a bound boy with the agreed annual privilege of 12 weeks of schooling which usually shrank to about six. These were days of long hours filled with hard toil, and yet our lad grew and thrived, developing an unusually rugged constitution and the ability to take care of himself. Following his bound period, Bill for a time walked the tow path of Clinton's Big Ditch, driving the canal boat horses and mules.

This brings us to the lad's 18th birthday and his first great adventure. It was in the spring of 1857 that Bill shipped from New Bedford on the whaling vessel "Morning Star." What thrilling stories of adventure and daring, suffering and heroism, this greatest of all American whaling harbors could relate of the bold crews that have sailed forth from its sheltered wharves. We can then imagine somewhat the high hopes, mingled likely with fear that lodged in the young Irishman's heart as the "Morning Star" hoisted her anchor, slid out from the harbor and was soon lost to view upon the broad Atlantic.

Now those were still the days of sailing ships, when most of the progress upon the high seas was at the whim of the winds. Ships, however, went and returned, but some of the journeys were long and the whaling ships especially did not usually return until their holds were full of oil. The time out for a whaler might be long or short, depending upon her luck.

So in the spring of 1859, after some 20 months upon the seas, the "Morning Star" and her crew, having rounded the Horn were coming in the equatorial whaling fields west of Equador. Brown and tanned were the crew from the long sail, and Bill, two years older, was now an able seaman.

The captain Norton kept his boat in spic and span shape and yet there was time for pranks and horse play. One bright sunny day Bill was stretched out upon a coopers horse fast asleep. A Portugese seaman seized the lad by the feet and yanked him off onto the hard deck. This was a little too much for Bill's ready Irish temper and a fist fight started at once. The Portugese was getting a good drubbing when the second mate, also a Portugese, came to his countryman's aid. Bill was soon reinforced and a smashing fight was fast making the deck a lively place when the captain appeared and a few rough oaths and threats soon brought peace. Outward peace at least, for while Bill soon forgot the incident, not so the second mate, whose memory was strengthened by a closed eye.

But the cruise had been unsuccessful and as the ship day after day rested upon the placid tropical sea, with never a spouting whale to break the monotony and inactivity, the men began to fret and grumble. California was only a few hundred miles north west and men were digging fortunes there of gold.

So as the almost becalmed vessel lay day after day upon the dreamy waters, baked by the vertical sun and drenched by the heavy equatorial rains, the discontent grew and flourished and soon gave way to mutinous whisperings.

Circumstances too seemed to be their ally for Captain Norton found it necessary to go to the mainland. The long boat that took him ashore had no sooner returned than the mutinous seamen attempted to seize the ship. Their leader, a beetle-browed, swarthy giant, who, on several occasions had drawn the captain's reprimand for his laziness, leaped upon a coil of rope and began to berate the captain and their unprofitable cruise. He then swung to the gold fields and pictured the big fortunes that men were scooping from California's sands.

"As for our captain," he shouted, "it was a piece of luck that took him away. Let us seize the ship and be off to the land of gold!"

While the ugly ruffian had been talking the crew had been breaking up into two groups, one around the mate and the wheel, while the other crowded about the mutinous villain. At a command from their leader this last group made a rush for the ropes, unfurled and trimmed the sails for northwest travel. Altho the sea was quiet there was breeze enough to slowly start the whaler and as the ship made a quarter turn and seemed to head toward the north, wild shouts of joy broke from the mutinous bunch. Their joy was short lived however, for the mate, surrounded by the loyal seamen had set the wheel and the vessel continued to turn and was soon moving in a great circle. The group about the mate then sent up a lusty cheer. Of these men none shouted more loudly than Bill, loyal to his captain and ship.

At this turn of affairs the rebellious group began to snarl like a pack of wolves, desiring, yet afraid to attack. Thus the two forces faced each other, and it looked as tho there would be broken heads aplenty, before the fray was ended.

This deadlock was soon broken, however, for one of the renegrades called the leader's attention to the two long-boats. The decision was quickly made and the rascals were soon launching the larger of these two boats. With excited haste they then broke into the ship's stores and stocked the long boat with provisions. Keenly the loyal men about their mate watched the mutineers, content to let them go if they did not harm the ship.

So with parting jeers and curses flung at the loyal men, the long boat pushed off from the whaler and headed northward, where far distant the blue sea and the blue sky met and mingled.

The tenseness dropped away from the little band upon the deck. They relaxed and walked about the ship. They took deep breaths and stretched like men who had long endured a cramped position. Some of them began to straighten up the ship as the mate swung the vessel toward the main land and the captain.

When Captain Norton came on board and was told of the mutiny great sea-oaths rolled across the deck and he commanded that he be set ashore at once. Very shortly a Peruvian gun boat shot out from the harbor and started in pursuit of the mutinous band.

The his temper was somewhat cooled upon his return to the vessel, the captain began to question the mate about the rebellious outbreak. This officer, seeing a chance to even an old grudge at once accused Bill and another seaman as the instigators of the plot. Still smoldering with anger the captain did not seem to sense the incongruity of believing that the inciters of the mutiny would have remained loyally at their posts.

Perhaps he welcomed the chance to dissipate his anger and set an example for the remaining seamen. So it would seem for he gave orders that the older seaman should be flogged. This man, the entirely innocent of any part in the mutiny, was then bound hand and foot and made to kneel over a coil of rope while the captain and mate belabored him with rope ends. Great angry welts, crossing and merging began to rise upon the man's naked back. It was a brutal affair and within a few minutes the man was prostrate with pain and agony.

Then turning to Bill the captain gave him the choice of taking a similar beating or of being set ashore upon one of the Galipagos Islands. The lad realized that it would do no good to proclaim his innocence. He was confronted by a very angry captain and a vengeful mate. Choosing what he hoped was the lesser of the two evils, Bill asked that he be set upon the island.

(This is the first of a series of articles by Supt. W. G. Pope, on the life of Comrade William McDonough. The second article will appear next week.—Ed.)

One letter, written by a man who is secretary of an organization of which Mr. Hopkins is president, stated. "The wet and dry issue will be to the front in the campaign for this office and Mr. Hopkins is courageously for the dry law enforcement." This letter in effect therefore, states that Mr. Mapes, of Friendship, candidate for the office of District Attorney, is not in favor of the enforcement of the dry laws.

In view of the fact that the candidate from Friendship for the Republican nomination for this office is recognized by all who know him as a lawyer capable of conducting the business of that office, and as a man who will intelligently and fearlessly prosecute such offenders as are guilty of any crime, including offenses against the dry laws, the Friendship local union of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union believed that in fairness to Mr. Mapes he should be given an invitation to publicly state his position on law enforcement in general, and dry law enforcement in particular, and as to whether there was any wet or dry issue in the campaign for the office of District Attorney.

In response to this invitation, Mr. Mapes, on June 25, 1929, appeared before a meeting of the Friendship Union and stated that he stands for law enforcement in general, and for dry law enforcement in particular, and that any person, or group of persons who says or attempts to insinuate that he stands for anything else is misrepresenting his position with reference thereto, and that such misrepresentation is made without any effort to learn from him his true position on law enforcement; that he has always worked fearlessly and with the best of his ability, for his clients, whether they were individuals, private or municipal corporations, and that, if nominated and elected to the office of District Attorney, he will continue to perform his duties in that regard as the prosecuting officer of Allegany County.

There is no wet or dry issue in this campaign for the office of District Attorney. The very nature of the office precludes such an issue. No honest man can take the oath of office and thereafter refuse or neglect to enforce every law, including the dry laws. Statements that such an issue exists can therefore only be attributed to ignorance or to deliberate attempt to misrepresent.

DEMANDS RELIEF IN RADIO MONOPOLY

Buffalo News Objects to One Corporation Hogging All the Buffalo Air. —Would Build Station.

The Andover News, in conjunction with many other newspapers in Buffalo and western New York, is joining the Buffalo Evening News in its effort to smash the Buffalo Broadcasting monopoly so that radio listeners hereabouts can get the service and enjoyment from radio to which they, as owners of the ether, are entitled.

At present the four most important radio channels assigned to Western New York are controlled by this corporation, and instead of improving service for the public, as was promised at the outset, service has deteriorated. The most noteworthy example of this is in the frequency and quantity of direct advertising matter that is sent out by the four stations controlled by the monopoly.

If that kind of material were limited to one station, it would be bad enough, but when it is multiplied by four and one of those stations is supposed to occupy a national channel over which high grade entertainment is supposed to come at all times, the situation becomes intolerable. The radio commission certainly is called upon to give the public relief from this condition.

This is especially important now as this same monopoly is reported to be reaching out for more stations in neighboring cities. If it succeeds in carrying out these plans, there undoubtedly will be further duplication of the kind of service which Western New York now gets —something that we had supposed was not contemplated by the radio or the congress when it passed the statute.

Questions of fundamental importance have been raised by an application of the Buffalo Evening News for permission to build and operate a station of 900 kilocycles, one of the channels now occupied by the radio trust. The News doubtless has plenty of other worries, but it is to be commended for undertaking this fight in which the Andover News heartily joins for the benefit of the radio listeners. The way is open for the commission to break this trust by granting the application of the News which has demonstrated that it has the public interest at heart in radio.

Competition in the air is as important as in any other line. The ether is the last national resource left to the public. It should be held safe for the public against such aggression as that of the Buffalo Broadcasting corporation, which, in forming a merger, has given up no channels and now is seeking other channels to monopolize.

Another question which the case of the News raises is whether wave lengths shall be held by a single company, or whether they shall be distributed among effective competing agencies to maintain competition and service. The federal government has set up a policy of free competition, and insists that it be maintained. Is it now, thru action of the radio commission, going to permit one agency to do what the statutes and federal policy prohibit?

Before this monopoly was created Buffalo had the best broadcasting service in the country, under independent management. Under the Buffalo Broadcasting monopoly, service is growing worse, and the listener is calling upon the radio commission for relief.
