The Red Hot Political Pot

CHARLES H. TUTTLE, nominee of the Albany Republican Convention, which bolted the national convention at Kansas City, and took an entirely different view of the 18th amendment, accepting the Democratic platform on the subject, spoke in Andover recently.

Mr. Tuttle showed the wear and tear of the campaign. He did not make as good an impression as he generally does, and was quite disappointing to the people to whom he spoke. "There is only one man running for governor of New York this year," said Mr. Tuttle, which was an unfortunate remark. He ignored Dr. Carroll of Syracuse, and tried to make a jest of Roosevelt, Democratic nominee. Just what twist of the mind, or political advice caused Mr. Tuttle to take that turn is not apparent.

He should not ignore Dr. Carroll, who is running on the National Republican platform of 1928, nor can he laugh off the Democratic candidate who is running on a platform practically the same to all intents and purposes as his own platform adopted by the rump convention at Albany.

Dr. Robert P. Carroll, candidate of the Law Preservation Party for governor of New York, spoke to a crowd of enthusiastic admirers at the Methodist church in Wellsville, Thursday evening. Among other things he remarked that "Mr. Tuttle says you do not need any more laws to enforce the 18th amendment. He says if he is elected, he will enforce present laws, and make the amendment effective.

"Since when has Mr. Tuttle become such an enforcement advocate? As he just resigned as U. S. District Attorney for the Southern District of New York, and during the three years in that office, he had 3,000 cases brought to him by the enforcement officers of his district. He tried 39. Not a very striking enforcement record. If he does no better than that if elected governor, the outlook for law enforcement is not very good."

The audience applauded Mr. Carroll on that statement, loud and long.

Another one of life's inconsistencies is that a baseball player works when it is too hot to work and loafs when it is too cold to loaf.

A youthful aviator says a horse is more hazardous than a plane. But perhaps he didn't live in the horse age.

[illegible] in the United States [illegible] of commercial apples is about two million barrels larger than last year and is of unusually fine quality.

If a whole apple a day is required to keep the doctor away, as the old saying leads us to believe, about half the people in the United States will need medical attention, as the per capita consumption of apples is one-half of an apple a day.

Apples are recognized as a very valuable fruit for eating raw. The immense production in the United States—164,000,000 bushels—is due in some measure to the public spirited work of an unknown benefactor, Johnny Appleseed, who is credited with having started apple orchards all over the middle west before many white men ventured into the trackless wastes.

His services were recognized in congress when in 1847, at the announcement of his death, he was referred to as an old man "who had been more for the west than any other man of his era."

Most of the knowledge of Johnny Appleseed rests on tradition. It is known that he was born in Springfield, Mass., in 1775 and it is said that he left his native state and wandered out into the wilderness because of disappointment in love. He was in the valley of the Potomac in 1790 and in western Pennsylvania in 1800. He gathered a great quantity of apple seeds from the cider presses in Pennsylvania and floated down the Ohio in a strange raft, made of two canoes, and loaded with bags of seeds. He was on his way west to make the wilderness bloom with apple blossoms.

"My mission in life," he told a pioneer woman, "is to have the apple trees ready for the settlers when they come."

His first nursery was in West Virginia and then he wandered into Ohio and Indiana planting his seeds and planting apple trrees in the wilderness. More than 100 nurseries were set out in the forests of the two middle western states by this strange wanderer.

With an axe, hatchet, and a hoe, he would seek a favorable spot near a river, prepare the ground and plant thousands of apple, pear and peach seeds. Then he would build a brush fence around the infant nursery to keep out prowling beasts.

Sentiment in Business

REGARDLESS of what may be said to the contrary, sentiment is a big factor in business. Friendship, for example, makes more satisfactory sales, quality and values being equal, than all the cleverness and high-powered sales talks in the world.

You like to trade at a certain store—not because its counters are arranged in an attractive way, but because the folks who serve you are friendly and helpful.

Just that very thing—friendly service—is the power that draws people together in communities like this, where everybody can enjoy the many benefits of neighborly co-operation.

Friendly service and an effort to retain it is the reason why you will find it decidedly to your advantage to trade with Andover advertisers—to buy where your friends will see that you are well satisfied.

There is no need to go to larger trading centers to supply your wants. Our merchants have the goods, the quality, the variety and they give big values.

A Reckless Habit

AN AUTOMOBILE driver in Massachusetts was brought into police court the other day on a charge of dangerous driving. And altho it was brought out that he had only gone at a rate of five miles an hour, he was found guilty and fined $50.

His machine was parked at a curb. He got in and, without looking behind, suddenly backed his car so that he could drive away. Two people, starting to cross the street just behind him, were knocked down.

This emphasizes once more that it is not necessarily high speed that makes an automobile dangerous. A driver who does not watch very carefully where he is going can be far more dangerous to others when he travels five miles an hour than a more considerate motorist is when driving at a 40-mile clip.

It's next to impossible to get on the road to happiness by getting off the path of duty.

We all have our faults, but our admission doesn't give everyone license to talk about them.

After a wedding breakfast at the home of the bride's parents, the happy couple left for a wedding trip to Washington, D. C. Mr. and Mrs. McCormick will reside at the groom's home in Rexville.
