LISTENING TO MUSIC

Part II.

In listening to music, the attitude or purpose of the listener plays a very important role. This is equally true of all of the activities of life. The degree of sincerity which the participant possesses in any situation reflects itself in the enjoyment or understanding which is the result of the activity. And so, in listening to music the purpose of the listener is of paramount importance.

As was pointed out in a previous article, music with the exception of the virtuoso or display concert or recital, is generally heard in connection with other arts or activities. Music occupies the place of a handmaiden art. It assists in making other activities more successful by providing an emotional setting which enhances the meaning of all kinds and types of gatherings and events. It is equally helpful in making more poignant the church service, the dramatic action of a play, the parade, the charge to battle, the wedding, the funeral and the dance.

When used in conjunction with these activities the listener unconsciously expects the music to fit in with the general emotional feeling of the social event. He appreciates again unconsciously that music has the power to adapt itself to any and all of the emotions and moods of the human heart. He also expects it to be of a character fitting to the particular event with which it is associated.

Even the most uneducated musical person can sense when the music is poorly adapted to the situation. The hymn has no place in the dance hall; likewise rhythmic and vulgar music cannot produce serenity of mind or exhaltedness of spirit that is associated with the church service.

How do musically uneducated people, when seriously and purposefully entering into a situation that involves music in association with other activities, sense whether the music is in keeping with the situation? A number of factors enter into this question. Perhaps the most obvious one is the use of language or a text with the music. Everyone can judge whether a poem or text is appropriate. Nautical ballads do not belong in the church service nor are love themes appropriate to the army camp.

The most important factor is that of mood or emotional content. If the mood of the music is consistent with the associated activity then the average listener is satisfied. The listener is interested primarily with the activity and secondarily with the music. It is expected that dance music will stimulate physical action, that religious music will exalt the spiritual and moral fibre, that lullabies will soothe and that martial music will strengthen courage and determination. All of this is taken for granted.

With how the music produces these responses, the listener is not concerned. This is the physical response. He is stimulated, lulled or adjusted. Finer shades of meaning, subtle aspects of character, and objectivity of forms and composition have no place in this type of listening.

The music is expected to adjust the listener physically to the requirements of the particular situation. If it fulfill these requirements then it justifies its existence and performance.

Bible School Lesson

By REV. CHARLES E. DUNN

Jesus the Good Shepherd
Lesson for Feb. 14, John 10:1-16
Golden Text: John 10:11

Judah is a land of shepherds. David was a tender of flocks from his boyhood. Amos, the first of the writing prophets, was a herdsman of Tekoa. The shepherd, to the man of Bible times, was the ideal figure. "The king and every true leader of men," writes Principal G. A. Smith, "was called a shepherd." And Dr. Smith reminds us of the majesty of the shepherd's character. You understand why the Bible gives to him such prominence, "when you meet him, sleepless, far-sighted, weather-beaten, armed, leaning on his staff, and looking out over his scattered sheep, every one of them on his heart."

Note, as an impressive illustration of this tender solicitude, that each sheep has its own name. It is not distinguished merely by a brand or head-mark, but has an individual name like a human person. "He calleth his own sheep by name," as our lesson text reminds us.

"And the sheep follow him: for they know his voice." Each shepherd has his peculiar call, and the flock knows the voice of its leader.

In the exquisite 23rd psalm we find God pictured as both a loving and guiding Shepherd. We must remember that the Oriental shepherd, instead of driving his sheep, as our western herdsmen are wont to do, goes before them. And he is always present. I recall seeing sheep in northern Vermont unattended, with pieces of board yoked about their necks to prevent their escape thru a thin fence. In the East the shepherd is never absent. There are no fences, and danger is constant. The shepherd, as our glorious Golden Text makes clear, must be ready to give his life for his flock.

How perfectly Jesus plays the role of shepherd! He is the Good Shepherd indeed, an inspired leader who poured out his own blood in defense of his often foolish sheep.

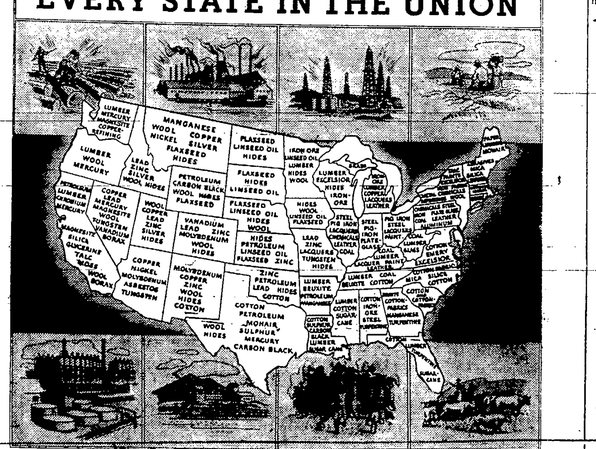
AUTOMOBILE STRIKES AFFECT EVERY STATE IN THE UNION



Map prepared by A.M.A.

The automobile industry is one of America's largest buyers of raw materials and manufactured products. The map above shows a few of the principal products bought by motor manufacturers in each of the 48 states, at a total cost for 1936 estimated at more than $1,600,000,000. Significant as this is in indicating the nation-wide effects of a strike, it is far from complete. Another map might show, state by state, the thousands of dealers and salesmen directly affected. There is no way to picture indirect losses in retail sales and in government revenue through reduced taxes and increased relief.
