A Worthwhile Example

THE bee suggests a sting. The first thought of the average person at the mention of the word is the consequences of coming in contact with one when it is out in quest of nectar to keep the home fires burning.

Bees, however, should be judged by their accomplishments rather than by undesirable traits. We should think of bees in terms of honey, the natural sweetener, also valuable to man.

"A bee-type" describes the traits of bees in a manner that shows they possess qualities that might well be emulated by people with great profit.

There are three kinds of bees: workers, queens and drones. The workers gather in the nectar to keep the wolf from the door, but the sad commentary is that there is stage life only to drones. They work for the colony and never live to participate in the honey they help produce.

The worker seems to be the rule that the colony may live. The activities of bees in hives also meet the same fate often. In every community are men who sacrifice their own comfort and happiness in the spirit of service to others, who forget the fruits of their labor.

The great trouble is that there are not enough workers. There are more average men and women who are willing to contribute for the community well-being, who are willing to accept the sacrifice of time and money that is required for real service to their fellowmen.

The comic relief in life is the freedom of a few, just as the bee worker has to gather the raw material so that the colony may exist.

Conceivably, would never prosper, would never get ahead if there were not sacrifices made by some individuals who are an effort and who do not shirk to incur the displeasure of those who hold back and shirk.

Bees are to be praised for their industry.

New Scheme of Life

KEEPING step with electricity, aviation, television and scientific development imposes an awful tax on humanity. Alfred Tennyson wrote hackneyed lines that are filled with the progress of his day:

"Let the beautiful precept fly
With the speed of the flight of the year;
Let it lighten a thousand a thousand miles a minute,
Girdling the globe with a belt of light."

So the Stone age, the Bronze age, and the Iron age; and the Paleolithic and Neolithic ages to boot, have gradually given way to the present soap age, with nice bathtubs to splash about in. Shakespeare's whining schoolboy has become a "mewling youth," and his soldier, full of strange oaths, is likely vice president of an automobile corporation or a bank that is "the county depository." All of the evidences are the people who are lucky enough to plod God's soil in 1937 are living in "the brain age."

Obviously the brain age gives to the individual the ability to place his or her own estimate on this new scheme of life that we brag so much about. You can't find a woman of 95 at large on a city street today who doesn't know all the low down concerning vacuum cleaners, pots and pans, automobiles, washing powders, face creams, the movies, radio features, or the ideas of senator so and so.

It isn't smart to tell people how sick you are. It makes you so mad when they don't look impressed.

Experts just now are finding out that the most dangerous thing about an automobile is the driver.

The first sign of old age is a disposition to argue about religion and the tariff.

The man who attempts to stand up for his rights against the speed maniac, generally finds his principal support in crutches.

Business Isolation Passes

NEWSPAPER advertising can rightfully be pointed out as the backbone of business in American towns today. There are various forms of advertising direct mail, billboards, magazines, newspapers, and various other forms—but the one in which the biggest pull and influence results, is no doubt attributed to newspapers.

The home town newspaper, whether it is published here in our town or in some state hundreds of miles away, goes into the home because it is wanted there because someone has paid for having that paper sent into the home.

When that newspaper goes into the home, the merchants send their messages in the same wrapper. Those messages form a most vital part of that newspaper. Advertisers of national repute are becoming more and more convinced that the local newspaper reaches the people they want in preference to many of the highly colored, expensive magazine pages that feature our news stands today.

A traveling salesman the other day, representing a line of goods used by a large per cent of the people, stated that his firm spent an enormous amount of money in advertising that business in a magazine of national circulation. Of this vast circulation within his territory of one state and several sections adjoining, the firm received eight inquiries from the advertisement.

The salesman followed up these eight inquiries and failed to make a single sale. He admitted that if that money had been spent in the home town newspapers within his territory, he would have had more business than he would have been able to take care of.

Advertising not only informs the people of the community that the advertising merchant has the goods, but creates a demand for the goods where there has been none before. Take your own case for instance. How often have you been induced to stop in a store and buy a certain article that you saw advertised but would not have remembered to buy had you not noticed the ad in the newspaper? The age of isolation in business is past and the fellow who wants to progress must keep in the race and stay abreast of the times.

Women In Business

WOMEN are not fixed in industry, they are fixtures of industry. As scientific research applied to industrial processes and commercial systems has progressed, the employment opportunities of women have been advanced, shifted or retarded. But the net result is expansion of the occupational area open to women.

Unquestionably, the developments affecting the employment opportunities of women which seem now most in kind are the result of investigations initiated for the purpose of finding new material for old products and of making new products out of old material.

Not only do these forces—these like new forces of far reaching influence, but they are usually responsible for newer processes, which in turn bring into existence new mechanical equipment all affecting directly or indirectly the employment opportunities of women.

New inventions have been responsible for conveniences shifting of the labor force in some industries. When wood pulp was discovered to be commercially available for certain grades of paper, men took the places of women in the better grades. In contrast to this, male men used to be the watchmakers, now, since the introduction of the system of interchangeable parts, women in great numbers are employed to operate the watchmaking machines and to assemble watch parts.

A glance back over the effects of research and invention upon women's jobs in the commercial field reveals results that are parallel of the dramatic development of the past decade or so in the field of manufacture. It is little more than half a century since the invention of the telephone and little more than a decade since radio really put people the world over within speaking distance of one another.

With a single exception—the revolution occasioned by the typewriter—no changes in the method of the business world have opened so many employment opportunities to women as the commercial introduction of the telegraph and telephone.

Physical exercise is good practice, but the mouth doesn't need to be included.

When we learn to know ourselves as others know us, our pride generally drops.

A wise man never throws rocks at his neighbor's chickens or talks back to a traffic policeman in a big city.

It doesn't require the services of an expert to discover that "tax" comes from an old Latin term meaning "touch."

HOW, WHAT and WHY?

Meaning of Abandoned

L. L. B. wants to know what is meant by an abandoned orchard and an abandoned farm, in connection with provisions of the 1937 agricultural conservation program that is getting under way throuut the state.

The answer: An abandoned orchard is one that is dead, or if it still produces some fruit, is not cared for in such a way that it may be considered a commercial fruit enterprise. Such an orchard will have a soil-building allowance of one dollar an acre if it can be classed as cropland.

An abandoned farm, even tho it has no crop land or fenced open pasture, may have a soil-building allowance if the county committee believes that the practices to be carried out by the owner promote the purposes of the conservation program. Such abandoned farms will have the minimum soil-building allowance of $20. Reforestation may be the only practice the committee will wish to approve for such a farm.

Removing the Cake

Mrs. D. S. B. writes: "In cleaning the inside of a tea kettle, how may the deposit which has 'caked on' be removed?"

The answer: The lime deposit on the inside of the tea kettle may be removed with a five per cent solution of muriatic acid. The acid may be bought in this solution in most drug stores.

Put a little of the acid in the kettle and work it around with a stick or wooden spoon until the deposit cracks off. Rinse the kettle immediately and thoroughly. Take great care that the acid is not left in contact with the metal for even an instant after the deposit is removed as it will affect the finish.

Sometimes it is possible to remove a large part of the deposit by letting the kettle dry thoroly; it may then be cracked off without the use of acid. In most parts of New York State where the water is moderately hard it is almost impossible to prevent deposits of lime on the inside of teakettles.

Arkport Farmer Commits Suicide

Fred Ebersol was found dead in his car on Hornell street, Hornell, Wednesday morning, with a hose connected to the exhaust pipe and extending thru the floor boards. On investigation, Coroner Burch of Hornell issued a certificate of death by suicide.

Ebersol resided on a farm about two miles west of Arkport on the Canaseraga road.

Cautions Cattle Owners

Vaccination against Bang's disease or infectious abortion "is still in the experimental stage and livestock owners should hesitate to place faith in claims that promise more than scientific findings to date warrant," according to Dr. J. R. Mohler of the bureau of animal industry of the United States department of agriculture.

The bureau is now conducting field experiments in about 250 herds, 25 of which are in New York state. Experiments are also under way at the New York State veterinary College at Ithaca to determine the value of calfhood vaccination against this disease.
