Let King Run the Navy

WAR operations of the American Navy are now under the control of Admiral Ernest J. King, who is Chief of Naval Operations and Commander-in-Chief, United States Fleet.

The Admiral qualified years ago as a naval aviator and is one of few high ranking officers with extensive experience in aeronautics. The people of the United States may be interested in his policy, enunciated some time ago, when he said that the Navy will develop an offensive against the enemy as early as that can be brought about with adequate forces and, in the meantime, harass and damage the foe at every opportunity.

The new commander of our naval forces cannot wave a wand and miraculously produce ships. Consequently, his strategy is hampered and the scope of his operations limited by the means at his disposal. He assumes the burden of a two-ocean war, with a one-ocean navy.

We think it would be a good thing for loyal and patriotic Americans to permit Admiral King to direct operations against the enemies along sound lines. Particularly, those of us at home, who know nothing about the difficulties of the present war, could do less senseless talking about "taking the offensive" and refrain from cry-baby shrieks about "defending our coastal areas."

Admiral King, we presume, knows his business. If this is true, we can rely upon his judgment in the disposition and use of our limited forces. If he is incompetent or incapable, which we do not suspect, safety does not lie in trying to run the Navy thru street-corner gossip, on the air waves or in the columns of newspapers.

Chinese Deserve Assistance

A NATION-WIDE drive will be launched in April to raise the comparatively trifling sum of $7,000,000 for Chinese relief. Allegany county will have its quota and the people of this county should lose no time in raising their share of this free-will offering, designed to demonstrate our sympathy for the victims of Japanese aggression.

The Chinese have demonstrated their right to live among the free peoples of the world. They have faced great odds and suffered enormous damage. Cruel injustices have been heaped upon the defenseless people of a peace-loving race.

The people of this country have failed to make their usual generous response to appeals for aid for the heroic Chinese. This is inexplicable to us. It should not stand on the record and the present campaign for $7,000,000 offers us an opportunity to show what we mean when we talk of brave China.

Your health is important to you, if to nobody else—take care of your body and live longer.

We never harbor ill feelings against individuals who disagree with us, altho it is amazing that so many people can be wrong.

There are many things being done badly, in connection with the nation's war effort—but there are other matters that are being attended to in typical American fashion.

We have seldom met a man who didn't have the solution to one or more of the nation's pressing problems.

How to Make That 25% Deduction on Your State Income Tax Return

State personal income tax forms for 1941 were distributed before the 25 per cent reduction, recommended by Governor Lehman in his budget message, was enacted. Page 1 of the form is being reproduced here, in part, to show you how to make the 25 per cent deduction in your tax. Simply compute your normal tax, add your capital gain tax, if any, and deduct one-fourth of the total in the space below line 20, as indicated by arrow. It should be noted, however, that the 25 per cent reduction does not apply to the unincorporated business tax. Returns are due by April 15. File your's now to avoid last-minute inconvenience.

Color Used to Ease Eye Strain In Factories

SPRING house-cleaning is in the wind. This year it will bring a complete renovation to many factories which are experimenting with the use of color on walls and machines.

The idea is not wholly an aesthetic one, but is pointed primarily at reducing the number of industrial accidents. In days when every man-hour on the assembly line counts, management is willing to try any suggestion which will bring down the total of lost time due to industrial accidents.

Two years of experimentation by illumination engineers have disclosed that certain colors in workrooms and in machines improve the eyesight of workers and reduce the accident toll in industry.

It all began 12 years ago when a New England shoe manufacturer decided to investigate complaints from his machine operators that they got headaches and saw spots after working for any length of time. Standing in his shop, he watched a man finishing a black shoe on a black machine, both of which blended into one dark mass. His suggestion was that the men paint their machines in their favorite colors. And it is reputed that accidents fell off nearly 70 per cent.

Where color has been used, best results were obtained when light buff or light gray was substituted as the color for machinery in place of the traditional black, dark green or battleship gray.

If workmen's surroundings are painted in two colors, instead of monotonous green, painted light gray and the walls set off in a contrasting light buff—experiments have demonstrated that the machinists will work in greater comfort, reduce the number of accidents and make fewer errors. All of these things are regarded by industry as of paramount importance—especially now.

"Modern" Slang

MANY expressions of so-called modern slang are centuries old and still in everyday use. Of course, much of what is called slang is actually modern and perhaps some of it will live on in common usage for centuries. Some have received official recognition and have actually become part of the idiom of our language.

The next time you use any of the following, quoted from American Speech, you may remember that they are "dated" much as shown by the years accompanying each.

Mad as a March Hare, 1565; Tell it to the Marines, 1830; Plain as the nose on one's face, 1660; Needle in a haystack, 1565; Put one's oar in (to intrude), 1596; Take down a peg, 1664; Pin-money, 1673; Put one's best foot forward, 1506; It never rains but it pours, 1749; Like a drowned rat, 1508; Make oneself scarce, 1749; So-so (mediocre), 1530; To call a spade a spade, 1588; Spitted (impaled), 1751; Sponge (as parasite), 1598; as one's hide, 1731; Thru thick and thin, 1359; Three's a crowd, 1430; Steal one's thunder, 1709; Two birds with one stone, 1656; Wild goose chase, 1595.

Food For Thought

ONE familiar description worthy of thought concerns the struggle for efficiency in Washington, and on this subject a famous writer says "it is not a struggle between isolationists and interventionists, radicals, and conservatives, old dealers and new dealers, capital and labor, the Administration or the public." But he finds the struggle actually is between "energetic men" and "passive men"—the struggle between live-wires and the dead-wood. That's a very good analysis of the situation in Washington, and undoubtedly it may be extended to include all parts of the United States.

There are a number of special groups in the U. S. seeking to take advantage of the war to advance their claims; the list doesn't end when you mention labor, farmers, industrialists and politicians.

A racket is anything that brings an individual more money than his services or his commodity is worth.

"Equality For Farmers Through Co-operatives"

Following is the second prize winning essay, written by Jean Rogers of Andover in the recent Dairymen's League essay contest:

EQUALITY FOR FARMERS THRU CO-OPERATIVES

America is now at war. The American people are standing, back to back, firmly behind Americanism and its high ideals which are threatened by this greatest war of all wars. President Roosevelt and Douglas MacArthur are daily bending their efforts toward winning the war by the strategy and mechanics of military operations. There is another phase of war to be won, the economic side; and, again, the agricultural population rises to meet the great demand made upon it. The agricultural domain, in filling the economic war needs of the United States, Great Britain, Russia, and other factions of the Allied cause is daily unearthing more and more of its inexhaustible potentialities. Today the American people realize the same fact that the co-operative associations have been trying to put across for years, namely "The equality of farmers with industry and labor."

The American dairy farmer of 1941-42 is more prosperous than he has been for a long time. Why? Because farmers have united with each other to form big co-operatives and, in so doing, have been able to accomplish that which would have been impossible alone, "a living price for milk" in comparison with other prices. Much has been done and much still remains to be done.

The struggle of the farmer for recognition and fair play has been long and hard. It was thru co-operative agencies, chiefly the Dairymen's League, that the farmer rose to his rightful place in the world.

Before 1836 the farmers of the area now known as the New York Milk Shed marketed their milk in the form of butter and cheese. Even then they realized that they could obtain a better price for fluid milk if it were possible to market it thus. They knew that excellent markets for fresh wholesome milk could be found in metropolitan areas, but the transportation and distribution problems hindered them from immediate mobilization of the plan.

In 1844 the first co-operative association of farmers was formed. This association, the Orange County Milk Association, began shipping milk by rail to New York City. An investigation made in that city by medical authorities revealed to the general public that Orange county milk was far superior to distillery milk in every way. Distillery produced milk was gained from cows which received a large percentage of slop from factories and very little hay. This distillery milk was unwholesome and in percentage of butterfat rated far below the high quality of Orange county milk.

In the period of years from 1889 to 1907 many co-operative organizations were formed to attempt to obtain for the producers a fair price for milk. These organizations, despite the fact that they fought bitterly the opposing forces of big business, unfair state laws, and innumerable handicaps, failed for the express reason that they strove for too high ideals, were too aggressive and resorted to hot headed opposition in the form of unorganized strikes. Their objectives were good but the management was too poor.

Then, in 1907, like the dawn of a new day, the Dairymen's League, a new co-operative organization, rose from the depths of other failures to become a hope for the prosperity of milk producers.

In October, of the year 1906, members of the Wallkill Grange, No. 983, felt that they had hit upon a plan which would succeed. They appointed as a committee O. W. Mapes and C. A. Evans to place their plan before the Pomona Grange, which not only approved the plan but also assumed leadership until 500 producers' signatures could be assured. The first steps upward had been made. The organization had been formed and named in the Wallkill River Grange and had been put on an established basis by the Pomona Grange of Orange County. In August 1907, the Dairymen's League Inc., was "launched and incorporated" with a membership of 691 dairymen with John Y. Gerow as president.

During the first ten years after its organization, the league went forward slowly, thus insuring success. It did not bring forth ideas like the radical reforms of its unsuccessful predecessors, reforms which had been quickly subjugated by the Consumer's Exchange.

In 1916, with the rising prices caused by the World War, then in progress, the status of affairs changed. There was need for immediate action on the part of the farmers and the League, for altho the price of milk rose steadily in co-ordination with other prices, the producers received no more than they had previously gotten. When the directors of the Dairymen's League Inc. announced to dealers a minimum price for milk which was flatly refused, the officials, deciding that drastic action was necessary, ordered the members to strike. An eleven-day strike ensued which resulted in victory for the League, the first victory that dairymen had been able to win in the long struggle dating back to 1882.

Because of the unquestionable victory attained by the League and its members, many dairymen flocked to the organization eager for membership so that the prosperity of the organization grew by leaps and bounds. When a second strike in 1919 resulted in success the membership of the league swelled to 90,000 members. One clash after another followed these two successes. It was the newly born collectively bargaining power of the farmers against the established power of the milk distributors. The fundamental things were quite evenly divided between the two groups. The distributors owned the plants, the markets, if one may say markets can be owned, and the milk cans. The producers owned one thing, a big thing—the milk. Whenever a strike was called, the farmers kept their milk at home while the distributors fumed at the prospect of empty cans. This surplus milk was made into butter and cheese by the co-operative wives of the dairymen, since these products had to be sold at a price much below the ordinary price received for fluid milk, the cost of strikes to the producers was terrific. Yet in spite of this loss of profit the farmers were joyously happy for they knew that the ultimate result would be a milk price that they could live upon.

While all this had been going on the enemies of the Dairymen's League Inc., had been working hard to unite all opposing forces against the League with the result that a new barrage of opposition arose to confront the members. Politicians attempted to repeal the new co-operative laws which had been passed by the state degislature. Consumers boycotted the milk of league members. But worst of all was the continual barrage of criticism printed in some of the leading papers. But God was with the dairymen and not one backward step did they take.

In 1921, just 14 years after its organization, the Dairymen's League and its members scored a major victory with the passage of the Capper-
