State Farm Quota Set at $21,000,000

New York State farmers have been given a quota of $21,000,000 for the mighty Seventh War Loan according to an official anouncement made today by Carl C. Camenga, Deputy Manager of the Agricultural Division of the War Finance Committee for New York.

"This is the largest quota that we have ever been asked to meet," said Mr. Camenga, "but judging from the outstanding results of the past several drives, I feel confident that we will reach our goal. We all know that, with no let-up in the requirements for money to bring the war to the earliest possible conclusion, not only in Germany but on all battlefronts, there can be no let-up now in our efforts to meet this greater challenge. The fact that in all probability there will be only two war loan drives in 1945 makes it necessary to have the quotas increased. Then too, the fact that all bonds bought during April, May and June will count towards the quota will help materially."

T. B. Clausen, well known agricultural leader, will again be associated with Mr. Camenga in the coming campaign. Mr. Clausen pointed out that farmers who buy War Bonds will not only be doing their share in aiding the financing of the war effort, but they will also be setting up savings which bear interest, and which will provide a nest egg for the time when farm incomes may fall off.

Teacher Ousted For Slur at F. D. R.

A 58-years-old East Chicago high school teacher was suspended temporarily after her pupils reported that she had cast a slur at the late President Roosevelt during a memorial service.

The teacher, Nellie J. Mills, a science instructor and sophomore class supervisor, admitted saying, "For the first time in 12 years I can hold up my hand and pledge allegiance to the flag." John Dreesen, president of the School Board said.

She was suspended temporarily by the school board and it was reported that the FBI had been asked to investigate her activities. A hearing to determine if she should be suspended permanently was called to the attention of school authorities by indignant pupils who stalked from the room.

Farm Machinery Repair

By B. A. JENNINGS
Professor of Agricultural Engineering at Cornell University

J. F. McAllaster of Gouverneur, N. Y., chairman of the New York State Emergency Food Commission's Farm Machinery Advisory Commitee, points out that the production of 43,000 new grain drills in this country this year will be only a small fraction of what is needed. Therefore, farmers will do well to spend a few hours now to check over their old drills. "A machine, like the drill, which is so widely used in the production of food because it is adapted to planting such a great variety of crops, should be put in top condition now — ready for spring use," says Mr. McAllaster. Here are three important things to look after:

1. Clean out the fertilizer box thoroughly. Feltilizer left in the machine will cause parts to rust, resulting in rapid wear and breakage.

2. Soak rusted or "frozen" parts with a mixture of kerosene and oil to work them loose. Jack up the wheels and turn by hand to be sure all parts are working freely. Any "frozen" mechanism will be damaged on the first trip across the field.

3. Check the spacing of furrow openers and adjust tension springs for correet seed placing.
