ASK The Scientist

If you have a question to ask the scientists, mail it to the New York Press Association, The Castle, Syracuse, 10, New York. The Science Board of the Radio Workshop at Syracuse University will answer each week in the Andover News those questions considered most interesting and timely.

Question 1. Since H. G. Wells predicted a long time ago that future wars would be fought with diesase germs, and since there is no record of their use so far, in this present war, does this mean that it hasn't been tried or that, having been tried it has failed?

ANSWER. Use of pathogenic microorganisms would be of a very limited and questionable military value. So far as military forces are concerned, they are under such direct observation and control by their medical officers, and so well disciplined and trained in personal hygiene, that it would be difficult to start extensive epidemics among them.

Such attempts might have a somewhat greater measure of success with the civilian populations, but even here they would have only so-called "nuisance value." The Japanese are reported to have attempted to introduce bubonic plague into parts of China several years ago but very little success attended their efforts.

Bullets, bombs and artillery fire are far more effective and controllable than micro-organisms as agencies of warfare. — Prof. N. Jones, bacteriologist.

Question 2. When does death occur? When the heart stops beating, or at some subsequent time?

ANSWER. Death occurs when the tissue of the body no longer utilizes orygen or give off carbon dioxide. This is usually several hours after the animal meets a sudden death. When an animal dies of natural causes the death usually occurs shortly after the heart stops. — Dr. Verlus Lindeman, zoologist.

Question 3. Inasmuch as 78.2 calories are required to melt one gram of ice and only 48 calories are used to melt a gram of iron, why is so much heat necessary to melt iron? Ice melts at ordinary temperatures.

ANSWER. A bit of confusion is present in the questioner's mind on the difference between heat and temperature. Heat is a unit of quality; whereas temperature is one of quality or degree.

Ice begins to melt at a low temperature, O degrees C, or 32 degrees F. because of the small attractive force between the ice molecules. Once it starts to melt it absorbs 79.2 calories for each gram of ice which changes to liquid water.

Iron atoms, on the other hand, are so strongly attached to each other that they must be heated to a high temperature, 1535 o|C, or 2796 o|F., before the forces of attraction are weakened sufficiently to permit melting to occur. At this temperature each gram of solid iron requires only 48 calories, or heat units, to cause it to melt.

Little or not relationship exists between the temperature at which different substances melt and the number of heat units or calories necessary to melt one gram. — Dr. A. J. King, chemist.
