Sequoia Potato Has Best Yield

As a result of tests in several counties, the Sequoia potato was found to average highest in yield in New York State this year, according to Prof. E. V. Hardenburg of the vegetable crops department at Cornell.

Next in order of average yield of No. 1 size tubers were Erie, Green Mountain, Sebago, and Pontiac, he said. These five varieties have been among the leading ones for a number of years.

Yield tests the past season were made in Broome, Chautauqua, Jefferson, Madison, Suffolk, Sullivan, and Wyoming counties as well as Ithaca, with extension services in the various counties cooperating.

Professor Hardenburg said this was a year that gave all varieties a more severe test than usual. Late blights, leafhopper burn, and late planting tended to influence yields, and resistant varieties had a chance to demonstrate their worth.

"Of the new varieties widely tested for the first time in 1945, Teton and Ontario looked the best. Mohawk, now on trial, for two years, gained favor in 1945.

"Enough seed was produced in New York and nearby states in 1945 to make it possible for a few growers to try on a field scale in 1946 such new varieties as Erie, Sequoia, Mohawk, Ontario, Menominee, and Seneca. Those interested should inquire of the county agent or the department of vegetable crops at Cornell."

County Growers To Attend Potato Potato Meeting

Belmont, Dec. 22. — Potato growers in Allegany County are viewing with particular interest the eleventh point convention of the Empire State Potato Club and the New York State Vegetable Growers Association to be held in Hotel Statler, Buffalo, January 3 and 4.

The fact that E. L. Kent of Andover won sweepstakes at last year's Potato Club show on both plate exhibits and market packages and will show again at Buffalo, also that William F. Hodnett Fillmore, is chairman of the program committee, and is to speak for upland Western New York growers in Thursday forenoon's ten o'clock round table discussion of "The Future of the New York State Potato Industry" and local interst. Mr. Hodnett and Max Torrey, Olean, extensive growers, are both directors of the club.

The program committee is seeking the attendance of Clinton P. Anderson, secretary of Agriculture in President Truman's cabinet.

Two full days are promised of subjects of vital interest to members of both groups. Forenoon sessions will be separate with a joint session each afternoon, addressed by distinguished experts in many lines.

During Friday forenoon session Dr. Ora Smith, department of vegetable crops at Cornell, will explain results of his experiments in controlling sprouting of potatoes in storage. Dr. R. W. Leiby, Cornell extension entomologist, will discuss DDT for insect control.

Liberal prizes are offered for 15-tuber exhibits of all common varieties and some of the newest varieties of potatoes, also prizes for market packages of various sizes.

Assistant County Agricultural Agent V. C. Stevenson will aid county exhibitors with transportation and entry of showings. He has detailed programs. He suggests that attending interested exhibitors make hotel reservations at an early date.
