wanted "something new."

From here I decided to travel up to study hall and ask an outsider her opinion. I spyed Evelyn Glover and when asked she suggested "pleated skirts and long-sleeved blouses."

Well, folks you may draw your own conclusions, but the majority seem to want skirts and sweaters with a few jackets thrown in.

We shall be back next week with another question and answer, so be prepared for you may be the one to voice your opinion.

Seniors Write Plays

If by chance you happen to drop by the English IV Class during the week of October 29, 1946, you may have been surprised to see four or five Seniors frowning and sighing over several sheets of paper in the front of the room, but investigation proved it to be the premiers of the sensational play written by the Senior Class members. The assignment was given by Mrs. McFadden after reading "Macbeth" by Shakespeare and although our plays were not sensational, our week's work proved worthwhile.

Three class members, Audrey Baker, Phyllis Temple and James Kessler, were chosen to keep notes on the plays and to judge them. The class voted and acted as fourth judge.

A play written by Audrey Baker called "Lodema" was given first place. This was an excellantly written play of a girl in olden times who, tlthough the older generation denies it, does not differ much from today's teen agers when it comes to the question of beaus. "Two Desolate Souls," written by Patti Fulton, tied for second place, with "Training Arithmetic" by Phyllis Temple. Patti's play was about two teen age girls, Mert and Gert, and their problems. It was very humorous and much enjoyed by the class. Phyllis' play was about two six-year-old boys who spy on their older sister and her boy friend when he comes to call. This was also well written and humorous. There was again a tie for third place by Mary McAndrew's play "Stardust Sprinkles the Returned" and Jim Witter's "Deceivable Flight." Mary's play was about family life with its complications and Jim's play was about a flight on a B-24 ending in disaster.

Altho these plays were chosen for the first three places, all the other seniors should gain recognition for their work. I think I am safe in saying that all seniors now appreciate Shakespeare's genius for writing. PAL

When I spied a short Junior with brown hair and brown eyes, I decided, at once, that she, being a new student, should be better known to her classmates.

Harriet Elizabeth Herring came to our metropolis from Baltimore, Maryland and is better known as "Ducky." Quite likely, her favorite food is fish—plus ice cream. A few more favorites are:

Car—Cadillac.

Movie—The Bells of St. Marys.

Actor and Actress — Bing Crosby and Ingrid Bergman.

Book—Hungry Hill.

Authoress — Grace Livingston Hill.

Her ambition is to become a vetinerian. Extending our best wishes for happiness and prosperity, we say so long for now with hopes of meeting again, soon. PFP

Letter to The Editor

Dear Breezy:

We poor Freshmen are writing you as a last resort, hoping for a helpful reply.

We truthfully feel we are being left out of activities and do not feel one of the gang. We realize that being new and not too experienced in High School get-togethers that we cannot take the lime light, but we just want to feel one of the crowd.

Hopefulyy Yours,
The Freshmen

Dear Freshmen:

It broke our hearts to read your letter, but we did profit by it. We had no intentions of leaving the Freshmen out of things and wish to be forgiven.

All we can do now is to introduce you formally in this column and ask the upper classmen to look around in the Freshmen room and see the material that is going to make all activities more exciting from now on.

Sincerely Yours,
Breezy.
