Questions About Cupid

I never imagined I was in the lovelorn department of this magazine, but one of my friends came to me and asked me all about this thing that cupid handles so nicely. It seems some of the questions were pretty good and some of my answers were pretty gooey so I'm going to let you in on just what happened in our conversation.

She comes up to me with a questioning look on her pretty face and says, "Can you tell if a person loves you or not?". I asked her if he had looked at her at all, today. Yes, he had, so we'll go on from there. Had he asked her what the assignment in English was, if yes, had he written it down with her pencil? Yes, he had and last night they had shared a soda so I guess it must be love (woof! woof!)

Then came that dumb question "Do I love him?" Well, did she feel as if she could make good use of a rolling pin? Could she make him cringe under her dictatorial ways? Did she feel she could look a hole through him if he looked at another woman? Jeepers, yes, she could do all that. Right then, I left her and put a "beware" sign out on the bulletin board for all males interested in slavery. I can imagine her second husband's tombstone reading "Here lies Jones—he was leading the life of Riley. Then Riley came home." Enough of that.

"What is love?" came number three. "Love," I said " is the feeling you have that you're never felt before." She said, sadly, that he had never kissed her, so how would she know. I kindly explained to her that a kiss is only a noun without any tense given by boys without any sense (ouch!) so she needn't worry about that. She hadn't had a hug, either, but when I told her it was only wasted energy gone to the "waist," she felt much better. It seems that the question of how did I know all this came next. Good gravy, — and me with no ready answer. Well, after I cooled off, I began to wonder how I did come by all this knowledge. Must be my aunt told me, the one that's an old maid with whom I have to converse. How did she know? Hummm! Maybe I selected the wrong source for my knowledge (could be—? !) Anyway, I told my girl friend that aunt told me all this and changed the topic a bit.

Now that I've convinced her that love is merely the asking of an English assignment and the meeting of a gaze, with no further adieu except the soda, I left her with the thought in my mind of what a wonderful time she'd have giving English assignments and sharing sodas. Well, I am not one to say. After all, I'm only sixteen. TNK
