Conservation News

Albany, Feb. 7.—While New York State forests were being denuded by industry and the war emergency, the Conservation Department has been fighting to save them by planting more than a quarter of a billion trees on reforestation areas, according to a report released by Commissioner Perry B. Duryea.

Figures compiled by the Department's Division of Lands and Forests show that since 1929, more than 2,780,600,000 trees have been planted in nine districts. During the past year a total of 2,468,500 were planted, three times greater than in either 1944 or 1945. This year's plans call for setting out at least 6,000,000 trees, A. S. Hopkins, Assistant Director of Lands and Forests, said.

The Conservation Department's 1946 law enforcement campaign resulted in the conviction of 4,091 violators for total settlements of $84,752, conservation Commissioner Perry B. Duryea revealed this week. More than 60 per cent of the fines were imposed during the last three months when the efforts of Games Protectors were intensified as a result of what Commissioner Duryea termed "an apparent widespread breakdown in sportsmanship."

The last quarter of 1946 set a new department record, it was said, not only for the number of cases settled but also for the general stiffness of penalties invoked and speed with which violators were brought to trial. During that quarter, a total of $50,000 in fines was imposed, mainly by local magistrates, exceeding the entire amount imposed during most years. In addition, a number of jail sentences were given violators.

Surplus airfield floodlights once used by the nation's "war birds" today may help to speed the life cycle of New York State game birds.

With such floodlights purchased from the War Assets Administration, the New York State Conservation Department may be able to advance the laying and hatching season for ring-neck pheasants by three weeks, making it possible to have stronger birds for the Fall liberation period.

Under normal conditions, the young some times are not ready for Fall liberation in New York State, since they are not old and strong enough to withstand cold weather and predatory animals. The floodlights will be used to light the breeding farms and expose the birds to seven hours of electric light daily, in addition to normal daylight.

Conservation officials in the Ithaca region expect to begin their artificial lighting of six-acre pheasant breeding farms about March 1 of this year.

SCOTT'S EMULSION ROUND TONIC

Draftee to Be Notified of Classification

Approximately 30 days previous to reaching his nineteenth birthday, each 18-year-old registrant will be given formal notification he will be classified by his Local Board when he becomes nineteen, Brigadier General Ames T. Brown, State Director of Selective Service, said today.

This action, General Brown stated, is due to a belief that 18-year old registrants have little knowledge of, or have overlooked, their protential liability for military training and service and their responsibility under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended.

"Although there has been no change in the liability of a man to register when he reaches his 18th birthday," the Director went on to say, "Congress has changed the liability for military training and service to begin when the registrant reaches his 19th birthday. Even though registrants are not being inducted at this time, there is no change in the obligation upon the Local Board to classify a registrant when he becomes nineteen. The purpose of the formal notification to the registrant, 30 days in advance, is to permit the registrant to submit to his Local Board in writing any and all evidence he feels will have a bearing upon his classification.

"Even though the registrant is classified in 1-A, it does not mean he will necessarily be inducted. That depends upon the armed forces and Congress. Under present law," General Brown emphasized, "he must register when he is eighteen and it is still necessary for his Local Board to classify him when he reaches nineteen."
