Better Health For Children

A Community Service Issued by Children's Hospital of Buffalo, N. Y.

Caring for a newborn baby is not as difficult as many new mothers are inclined to believe. As a mother, you will sense what to do in many instances—in other words, what common sense tells you to do is often right.

Contrary to what many people think, a newborn baby is not a delicate, fragile thing. He had to fight to get into the world, and he's sturdy, so handle him firmly. He won't break. True, he does have a "soft spot" on his head, but it is covered with a tough membrane, so you don't need to be afraid to wash his head.

Most doctors feel that breast feeding is best if there aren't other factors present, such as the mother's health or a special diet necessary for the occasional child, to counteract the advantages of breast feeding. A breast-fed baby gets the food nature intended for the human infant, and experience has proven that babies who are breast fed are somewhat better able to survive severe infections. However, do not feel that you aren't doing right by your baby if he must be bottle fed. Your doctor will prescribe the right formula for your baby, and will supervise the formula with the needed changes as long as your baby is bottle fed.

All formulas must be sterilized, because germs grow readily in milk. However, it is not necessary to be over fussy and boil everything the baby touches. The best way to keep him from getting infections is to keep people away from him when they have colds, sore throats, or sinus conditions.

Don't be too alarmed if your baby has stomach aches during the first weeks after he's born. These are not harmful if the baby is gaining weight at the normal rate. The most common cause is neglect to have the baby's stomach emptied of the air he has swallowed by not "burping" him after each feeding.

Hiccupping and spitting up small amounts of formula are common but are not cause for concern as long as your baby is growing as much as he should. However, if there is any question do not hesitate to call your doctor.

There are certain symptoms, however, that are danger signals. If any of the following symptoms develop, call your doctor. These symptoms are: watery bowel movements, pus or blood in the stools, fever of 101 degrees or more, prostrated, sunken eyes appearance, twitching, jerky movements of the arms and legs and even refusal to eat normal diet.

Every baby does need to be played with and cuddled to make him feel that he is loved, that he "belongs", and is secure. On the other hand, too much attention will spoil him. Don't try to train him on too strict a routine, because babies have a way of working out a fairly satisfactory schedule for themselves.

When your baby is born, select a baby doctor promptly, so that you can turn to him when any question regarding your baby's health arises.

Your suggestions for subjects to be discussed in this column are welcomed by the Children's Hospital.

A self-conscious person is apt to be suspicious that casual remarks are personal criticism.
