Memory's Guile.

NO. 19

For the Andover News. The years roll by .- the fleeting years, Swift chariots of golden days,-A never ending hurrying throug Before our vision plays. We see them ever coming on Slowly, one by one,-We see them ever gliding by

And sometimes from the past we catch A gleam from their bright train, When memory flashes their old joys, Like magic on the brain. At the return of Christmas time These olden memories start The muse controls the poet's pen

Into oblivion.

O'er the ever lengthening track Of long departed years. Nothing of the past is dead That memory can recall; Our sleeping hopes and joys return And throng in memory's hall.

The faces that we used to meet Return with their old smile, And fond lips part, while in the heart Awakens rapturous guile. It is the thought-gleams of the past That serve to light each day, And efforts, from Hope's sepulchre, Shall roll the stone away.
