Through a nieadow, fresh and green, Bubbling, flows the gentle brook. Here the minnous may be seen, Here the youth, with line and hook.

Long the valley, deep and wide. Winding onward, strong and free, Flows the river, till the tide Meets it, envoy from the sea.

Out upon the ocean, vast, Here and there, an island lies,— Tranche deep, by Neptune cast, Or by Jove drop'ed from the skies. Majestic, o'er the billows ride Stately ships on every hand,-

Moved by wind, and wave, and tide,-.He rules the waves who rules the land. Why this wondrous maze of life, In earth, and sea, and sky? Why yearns the soul to learn the cause Inane, the echo answers, "Why?" BINGHAMTON, N. Y. June-12, 1893-
