What the Editor Gets.

Man born of woman is spanked by a hired nurse and jerked bald headed by a crank school master, and attended with a select and varied assortment of troubles. He lingers on luxury's lap until paternal ancestors fire him out to begin his battle with the world. He starts a newspaper, his friends subscribe for the paper, but in the hour of need he finds their promises to pay, like three cent lamp chimneys, are easily broken. If he refuses to be social with Tom, Dick and Harry they say he is stuck up, and if he makes intimate with everybody he is courting with public favor. If he publishes all the news and business outlook, they say he is too fresh and is interfering with their private business. No matter how much he has helped and favored them in the past, they give him to understand that they are capable of running their own business without the help of the newspapers. If he doesn't make a person: 1 mention of every one in town they feel slighted; and if he does he will finally run across some man who does not like to be personalized, and gets his head punched.—Exchange.
