> ciple on account of such details as that Personal Influence.—Our Lord's parable of the leaven illustrates the power of personal influence in making disciples. The details of the leavening process are instructive. The leaven, introduced into the flour, divides in order to conquer. Each minute particle! of the leaven attacks that tiny molecule of flour which it touches, separates i' into its chemical constituents, expels rest into leaven like unto itself. The new particle of leaven thus formed at once assails the flour next to it and repeats the process, until, molecule by molecule: "the whole is leavened Here we see the disciple seeking his! ∡ brother or nearest friend and bringing ' him to Jesus to become a disciple and n turn go forth to seek another.
