Silks Used to be Called a Luxury, And well they might have been. After paying a big price

there was constant fear of their cracking or pulling, a thing that might occur upon first wearing, and it was really no more nor less than a lottery. Now all this is changed. You can buy a good silk or satin for $1.00 a yard and get a year's guarantee (in writing, if desired) and if it proves satisfactory for that length of time, it will, with reasonable wear, go for two years longer, thus, instead of being a luxury they are about as economical material, all things considered, as a woman can buy.

Our line of these goods, now most complete, comprising, taffeta, Peau-de-soie, Duchesse and Rhadame, at $1.00, $1.25 and $1.50. Samples sent on request, or what is better, come and examine them in the piece and at the same time make all your Fall purchases of Dry Goods.
