The Jefferson Memorial Road. The proposition to build a memorial i road connecting the home and grave of)

Thomas Jefferson and the University of Virginia is one of more than local Interest. Charlottesville, the seat of this historic institution, is intimately associated with the fame of Jefferson, and the university was always near to his heart. There is scarcely a doubt that the founding of the University of Virginia brought greater satisfaction to the venerable statesman as he reviewed his long life than the fact that be had been governor of his native state or minister to France or secretary of state or even president of the United States. He once wrote: "Could the dead feel any interest in monuments the following would be to my manes most gratifying: 'Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom and father of the University of Vir-

There could hardly be a more fitting memorial to him than the construction of a noble avenue which shall traverse the four miles of beautiful country between the university and Jefferson's home at Monticello. Besides, the enterprise would advance the movement for good roads in the United States by serving as an example for every district of the middle Atlantic and southern states.

The memorial movement is being conducted by an association recently formed at Charlottesville, of which General Fitz-Hugh Lee is president and Mr. J. M. White treasurer, and the co-operation of those who revere the great Virginian would be appreci-
