VILLAGE ATTRACTIONS.

Something Needed to Offset Use of Modern Conveniences. Telephones, rurai mail routes, interurban and trolley lines have had the effect, it is said, of making small towns and villages more quiet than formerly says the Indianapolis Journal. Now that the farm telephone has come on the taxable property of the county nated the Belmont Dispatch to publinto use, its owner does not "hitch up" for compensation for the stenographer lish the session laws of the Legislat- and go to the village as formerly to do ure, and the Bolivar Breeze to publish his errands. He telephones to the the election notices and the official storekeeper his order for goods and asks him to send them out by troller or by the first man traveling that way; he consults the doctor over the telephone and talks with his friends in the village in the same way.

The mail is brought to his gate and thus relieves him of the necessity of a daily trip. His relations with the blacksmith remain unchanged, for no that useful personage can shoe a horse or mend a wagon without having horse most crowded with horses and vehi-

of his wife or daughter on a similar errand. All this is a natural but rather and what remedy the village has is not plain. Its only hope is apparently to establish attractions of a social or edu-'ational nature that will offset the loss
