OLD UNCLE JED,

Who Sees Some Things. They were sitting around the fire in the back of the country store at the four corners waiting for the aftermoon mail that came up with the stage, when the door opened and in came "Uncle Jed," not much of a man in appearance, but whose crufie philosophy and homely satire caused fear in all of its hearers.

"Going to snow, Jed?" asked S Higgins, owner of a small harness shop across the way. "Like as not we'll get a spell of weather 'fore winter's over," was the We were talking about what might have been," said the merchant as he drove the jackkame into the wooden seat upon which he was sitting. "That's your failing, boys; you're always thinking and talking of what might have been instead of rustlin about to be." "Well, you know as well as we,"

Uncle Jed, we had our chance. There was the old heading mill, the tannery . and that old shoe shop; but times have changed. No use trying, the epirit is lacking; and the largar places . take the cream and we get skim milk,"
