The Country Town Isthe Hope of the Nation

There are many country merchants who see their trade gradually slipping away from them-leaving the country town and going to the great cities by the channell of the mail order trade, says Maxwell's Talisman.

There are many country editors who see the prosperity of their towns depleted and circulation and advertis income reduced for the same

There are very few, however, who realize that their problem is a nation al one, and that it is wrapped up in and a part of the great fundamental estion whether this dation shall I destroyed by the physical degeneralitical corruption and class hatred and certain to culminate in anarchis tic crimes, motous mets, and all des troying social upheavats as the result of some long continued period of dustrial and commercial depress on. The fact is that the upon dang of the country town and suburban village as an antidote and safeguard against?
