dreds of millions have been wasted. Within the last 15 years it has been discovered that the roads are something; and so the state aid plan was devised. It proved to be the right plan-a plan by which the respective townships decide for themselves what roads shall be improved, and when the improvement to be made the state engineer takes the matter in hand, and this insures proper construction and the saving of money. As the state pays half the bill, the farmers are correspondingly relieved, and it has been found more roads can be built than was supposed to be possible, and yet the taxation upon farms has not increased because the state has paid for half | the work and farm property is really only a small part of the state tax list.
