Vast Unknown Threa-et North Poly a Challenge to Man

By EXPLORER ROBERT E. PEARY, U. S. N.

So long as the 2,000,000 square miles of unknown area at the north pole and the 3,000,000 square miles at the south pole are unvisited by civilized men they are a challenge and a reproach to manhood. In our next expedition the general plans of the last expedition will be followed, with some important a battle. Early in February we will start from Cape Sheridan for the north. The journey to the pole should be under way in good earnest by the early days of March. Our equipment will be practically the same as in men, with parties of Eskimo assistants from Whale Bay similar to those graduated from Cornell University, sorted to. The soil is amazingly consume 100 to 120 days. We should be back on the mainland some time of Cincinnati. in June, 1909.

From all the scientists know, and from all the inferences to be based upon that knowledge, the first white man to stand at the north pole will not see a scene very different from those traversed by most explorers in the Arctic. It is not likely that there will be even a mound of ice to mark the actual pole.

The man standing at the pole, though, will look upon a marvelous and novel scene from the astronomical standpoint. He will see the sun, like a wheel of fire, circling the horizon like a wheel instead of rising and setting. From day to day it will gradually ascend higher and higher i in a flattened spiral.

The sun will appear above the horizon on March 22 at the vernal equinox. It will not set for six months. On June 22, at the summer solstice, it will be highest in the heavens. Then it will slowly descend lower and lower until the disc disappears on September 22.

'At night, too, the stars will be a curious sight. Only those in the northern celestial sphere, of course, are visible there. Directly overheadnot precisely, but nearly, so—will be the polar star. Only it will be fixed. All the others revolve in widening circles. The stars on the horizon v always be there.
